NO USE FOR SCANDAL.

It is announced that the conservatives in the commons are sending forth literature by the cart load, the most of it being highly colored reports as to the alleged scandals of the government. The further fact is stated that "a policy of slander and misrepresentation are entered upon by the Tories to regain power." There is evidence of this in the work of the opposition during the present session. Its object has been to discredit the government. The theory is that if the administration can be given a bad name more will be accomplished than by honest criticism to unsettle public opinion.

To offset this scandal campaign the task has been essayed in some quarters of reviving the iniquities of the conservative government. Hence there is reference to the McGreevy-Langvin steal, the Curran bridge loss, the Esquimaux dock graft, the Harris land, and Tay canal jobs. The people, it is remarked, do not forget all these things, and more. They certainly do not, but the Tories will plead, and properly so, that they are not on trial, that when they were, and were found guilty, the punishment of the electors was swift and sure.

The Liberals condemned the scandals of their opponents, scandals without a defence even now, and they took office with the intention of putting an end to them, of administering the people's affairs honestly and efficiently. Some of the old sins are still in evidence, and practically because some of the old sinners are in the service of the government. Some new offences have been detected. The opposition has magnified them, it is true, and it is a natural political weakness. What the government should do is not to screen them—as it is not—but proceed with the purification of the public service. The fact that the government itself, voluntarily, began the cleansing process is very much to its credit, and what it needs must do is to keep on house-cleaning until the last vestige of evil or wrong-doing has disappeared.

To Sir Wilfrid Laurier the country looks to make the civil service and all that belongs to it clean and pure, and the civil service reform act, and Cassella's commission are the instruments that will bring this result about in good time. The premier has no use for scandals or scandal mongers.

Uncle Remus dead! Few, comparatively speaking, knew Joel Chandler Harris in life, for he was a shy and retiring man, but millions knew him by his works. His pen will write no more, but in the literature of the times it has done enough to keep Harris' memory alive for many a long day.

MODEL SCHOOL REVIVED.

There is to be a revival of the Model school upon the old conditions, save and excepting that there is not to be a county grant or a collection of fees. The government makes a contribution of 500 towards the school, and this amount will represent all the receipts, and should cover all the expenses.

Two difficulties meet the board of education, through this late announcement as to the intentions of the government. One is that the school of pedagogy has requested the removal of the principal of the Central school to the Victoria school, and he was the teacher of the model school. There is no room in the Victoria school for the Model school class, unless a class already there be removed, and there is no accommodation in sight for it unless Queen's can have it in one of the college buildings.

The other difficulty is in providing for the School of Pedagogy. It had a room in the Central school, which was vacated by one of the regular classes for a lengthened period. Queen's may provide for it also, but the pupils for practice teaching must be drawn from the Victoria school from time to time, and before the school management committee consents to this it must know to what extent, if any, the regular class work in Victoria school will be disturbed.

The Model school is a contingency for this year only, and pending a development of the education department's plans. The idea was, when the new Normal schools were projected, to do away with the Model schools, but it is becoming more and more apparent that there must still be institutions of this kind to answer the demands of the rural schools for teachers. Distinct schools are proposed, and possibly Kingston, as an educational centre, may have one of them.

A committee of the board was appointed some time ago to make representations to government with regard to this matter, and if it has not begun its negotiations, the sooner it does so the sooner there will be some demonstration as to the purposes of the education department respecting it.

IS IT BRYAN ONLY?

It seems a great waste of money to call a convention of democrats at Denver, at an expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars; simply to record the will of Mr. Bryan and make him the candidate. Already the necessary majority of the delegates has been secured, and the registration of them will be in his favour and a matter of form. The routine has been followed the same as if there were to be a fierce conflict, while the appearances are that everything will pass off too quietly to give a fitting eclat.

A New York paper, with a great display of sagacity, suggests that Mr. Bryan retire and give the party, or what is left of it, a chance to select some one else. Supposing Mr. Bryan were to do this, what would be the result? Some one would get the call, but not the election. Every man is not born to be a king, and every man is not born to be a president. Circumstances favoured Mr. Roosevelt. He was thought worthy of the vice-presidency, being a man of capacity, of dash, of sterling integrity, but with a McKinley in view he was not thought of for the higher office.

Men are sometimes in training for the responsibilities of state, and assume office with every qualification for the discharge of public duty. It was so of Roosevelt, of Hughes, and of many others. They make good the public expectations, because they are equipped with the mental and physical power, under cultivation, which make for success. Mr. Bryan has certainly not obscured his fight since as a public man he came into view. His personality is charming. No one who meets him will go away unimpressed. He has an eloquence of tongue which is unsurpassed. He has a wealth of thought that makes him an attractive figure anywhere or in any position. He has a mind and a will of his own. True, he has been twice defeated. Once the silver question made and unmade him. It gave him distinction as the unrivalled advocate of a current craze. It drove from his party all those who regarded the currency question as the issue in a national election.

Granted that he were willing to stand aside, to efface himself, to refuse the nomination, what then? Who is there to take the "coveted honor"? Not one who has the ghost of a show of success; not one who has made his way in public life to a place where he commands the public attention and forces people to feel that he is a nation builder. Many there are who in a minor way have done good service and shown themselves to be worthy of higher rewards, but not one who is the superior of Bryan in intellect, in character, in poise and pluck, in all the essentials of personal and political greatness. The party thought it had a second Cleveland in Judge Parker, and found it was mistaken. It is humiliating to admit that there is such a poverty in great men for great occasions, but it is the fact nevertheless.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The latest is that an alderman was having his horses fed at the cost of the fire department. This is the limit.

The French papers are talking election and Laurier. There is no name that means so much to the large majority of the people of Canada.

Now the fight in England is between the women who want the suffrage and the women who do not want it. If it keeps on there will be a perceptible rise in the cost of hat and hair pins.

The suffragettes of London are making a nuisance of themselves. If they acted with as much disorder inside parliament as they act outside of it, the country would be disgraced eternally.

The civil service reform bill must be a pretty good measure when the Ottawa Citizen approves of it. For the citizen is not passing out bouquets which the Laurier government has not earned.

The combines are still at work six days in the week, and perhaps on Sundays as well. They defy the government of Ontario, and the attorney-general appears to be afraid of them. Some one must have the hypnotic eye we have been reading about.

The Toronto Telegram has found that the strawberry of 1908 is disappointing. It has size, colour, everything but flavour. But, dear contemporary, what are you going to do about it?

The lords may kill the old age pensions scheme, just passed by the commons. There are openings in it for the use of the axe. But the masses will know that the commons and Asquith did their part. The lords and the electors for it.

The Manitoba liberals are not pleased with the concessions made by the premier ament the voters' lists. Sir Wilfrid, in his last speech, said enough to make one think he had repented of his actions. Why? The opposition does not thank him for his kindness.

The Toronto News affects to believe that the old liberals are astonished at the actions of the Laurier government. And some of the new liberals are astonished at the performance of the old liberals, especially those who have undertaken to edit conservative papers.

It Might Not.

Candid Advice.

Certain—it is that if such a change (in the civil service) is desirable for the dominion service, it should be equally desirable in the provinces, and no provincial government stands in better position than that of Ontario to take the lead in reform.

What Is It?

Edmonton Star. Hon. Richard McBride, premier of British Columbia, has declined knighthood. Some of his closest friends in the east take this to mean that Premier McBride's ambition is larger than a provincial premiership.

So Say We All.

Toronto Star. Shall the Hansard staff be under the control of the house? Ask us, and we'll say let the house be under control of the Hansard staff. When a member of parliament speaks more than twenty thousand words in an afternoon it should be the privilege of Hansard to rise and walk out.

Patronage Dies Hard.

Montreal Witness. Why the civil service bill confines its mandatory effect to the Ottawa departments and leaves the selection of officials throughout the constituencies still in the hands of the local members or defeated ministerial candidates is not obvious to those who are neither office givers nor office seekers.

FORETOLD CALAMITY

THAT OCCURRED TO CORNWALL CANAL.

Capt. Thomas Donnelly Wrote About Weakness in Canal Bank Eighteen Months Ago—He Saw Its Weakness.

CAPT. THOMAS DONNELLY.

The statement is made by H. A. Calvin of the Calvin company, that eighteen months ago, Capt. Thomas Donnelly, in a letter from Cornwall, to an official of his company, made the statement that there was a weak place in the Cornwall canal, near the place where the recent catastrophe occurred, and that if something was not done to strengthen it, an accident would sooner or later occur. The captain prophesied aright, and the accident did occur, a year and a half after he noticed the weakness in the bank. There is no doubt but what he drew the attention of officials of the marine department to the weakness, but nothing seems to have been done to remedy it, and there is also no doubt but what this was the beginning of the break that has resulted so disastrously.

Capt. Donnelly's condition continues about the same. He has shown wonderful vitality during his long and critical illness.
