GREAT STEEL SPAN DELI-CATELY POISED.

Built For Salt Lake Railroad Over San Gabriel River at Long Beach, California.

Los Angeles, Cal., July 15-In the construction of the Scherzer rolling lift bridge for the Salt Lake railroad over the old channel of the San Gabriel river at Long Beach, Southern California, will have the distinction of having the largest structure of the

One hundred and eighty feet will be the length of the single span, poised upon a pier of reinforced concrete imbedded forty feet in the earth and rising twenty feet above the mean tide, the topmost portion of the bridge when lifted to permit the passage of a vessel into Long Beach harbor will be 200 feet above the water.

In this bridge there will be 1,000 tons of steel, but so nicely poised and counterbalanced by hundreds of tons of concrete, enclosed in a great box of steel, that one man, exerting his strength upon a steel rope, will be able to lower the structure into posi-

At the Llewellyn iron works in this city scores of men, operating steam and compressed air riveters that make a noise like giant woodpeckers, are fast putting together the great pieces of steel frame of the bridge, and it is the opinion of the head of the big concern that the delivery of the terial to the site of the proposed tructure will begin within four to

Mr. Llewellyn stated that the work of constructing the piers, which was delayed on account of the presence of quicksand, is rapidly nearing completion, and that there now appears nothing in the way of the actual con-

Taken as a whole, the bridge will represent the largest piece of steel construction in the west. Each of the two segmental girders-of half circular shape contains seventy-five tons of steel, while each of the track gird-ers, which will pan the 180 feet of 5c. water, will contain sixty-five tons, and will be the largest on the coast. In the counterweight box there will of be 900 tons of concrete, which will nicely balance the hundreds of tons of steel and make light work for the two ninety-horse power motors to be in and above the opening for the passage of trains. Nearby will be the operating house, where the bridge engineer will be stationed. At no time will it be necessary for the engineer to make an inspection to see if the bridge, after being lowered, is in condition for the passage of trains, as he can tell glancing at an automatic signal whether it is properly locked. More than a score of tons of rivets will be used, and of this amount about seven tons will be applied in the segmental girders, which are nine feet in height and fifty feet in length.
