A LONDON CABMAN IS SAID TO BE LOST BOSCOBEL HEIR.

Romance of King Charles and the Famous Oak Revived By Lawyer's Discovery—Gratitude of Stewart.

London, Aug. 1.—In the year 1651, immediately after the disastrous battle of Worcester, King Charles II. flying from pursuing soldiers, was succoured by a loyal farmer named Richard Penderel, who hid the King amid the foliage of an oak tree...

For seven generations the pension was paid without interruption until, in the year 1859, two men, James Withington and Robert MacLaren, both descendants of the original James Penderel, were sharing the pension between them.

In December last year, Messrs. Petch and Co., a firm of solicitors, put the facts of Withington's disappearance before the public, with a view to discovering what had become of the missing man, and if he had left any children behind him...

The windfall will be extremely welcome to him, seeing that his business as a cab owner and cab driver proved unsuccessful and that he has been poor for many years in a state of poverty.

TOWN OF GANANOQUE.

A Yankee Steam Yacht Ran on a Shoal.

Gananoque, Aug. 1.—A large steam yacht flying the stars and stripes went aground on the shoal near Fullerton's Island about four o'clock Thursday afternoon.

The yacht's baseball team has not as yet broken its run of hard luck. Thursday afternoon it went down to Thousand Island Park and was defeated by the Park Nine by a score of 10 to 1.

Mayor J. A. McCammon has had large posters distributed throughout the town proclaiming Wednesday, August 13th as Gananoque Civic Holiday.

The many friends of Capt. Wm. Richardson of the Salvation Army, stationed here for a few months during the past year, will learn with pleasure of his marriage, which took place Thursday evening.

"Babe" O'Connor, the old short stop of the Gariocks, who went to Fort William early this season, and has for some time past been in Sturgeon Falls, has returned to town.

Miss Sarah Stenden, Victoria avenue, is spending some time this week in Quebec. Wm. Haynes, Desha, spending a short holiday with friends and relatives in Northern New York, arrived here Thursday to spend a short time with relatives in town.

Don't miss our sale of Clothing. Hundreds have taken advantage of it, and have been surprised at the wonderful values we are offering.

WARNING UNWARY.

Once Tried to Steal One Million Pounds. London, Aug. 1.—A brisk, alert old man of 73, of slight build, with a gray military moustache, passes the Bank of England on business nearly every day.

He is Edwin Noyes, the only survivor of the four men who committed what is known as the "Great Million Pound Forgery."

Thirty-five years ago, in company with Austin and George Bidwell and George Macdonnell, he was sentenced to imprisonment for life for the crime by which bankers were defrauded of more than a hundred thousand pounds.

After serving twenty years in prison Edwin Noyes and his companions were released on ticket-of-leave. The brothers Bidwell died in America. George Macdonnell was killed in San Francisco, and Noyes is now the only link with the past.

The home secretary has just canceled Noyes's ticket-of-leave, and he has returned to London a free man.

He has put the past completely behind him, and is now engaged in a mission from America to forestall the rush of American gamblers who come at this season in shoals to prey on Londoners.

Noyes is now an active spirit in the International Anti-Gambling Association, founded by John P. Quinn, the former prince of gamblers and card-sharps.

The balance of his life, Noyes states, he intends to devote to rescuing men from the folly of gambling, which was his ruin.

"Austin Bidwell was one of the cleverest and most daring men of his time," Mr. Noyes said last night.

"He said to us: 'I have planned to 'take' the Bank of England for a million of money. The vaults are open to those who are bold enough to try.'"

"An elaborate system of forged letters of credit and bills of exchange was planned. Austin Bidwell was the principal accountant for the scheme, and readily cashed at banks in Berlin, Dresden, Bordeaux, Marseilles and Lyons."

"An account was opened at the Bank of England by Bidwell in the name of F. A. Warren, and his credit was a slight time overdrawn. A slight mistake in spelling the word 'indorse' with a 'c' in a bill drawn on Buenos Ayres led to questions, and only £10,000 instead of £200,000 was realized from South America."

"The plan could still have succeeded, for South America had no cables in those days, and it was forty days by ship before warning could be given."

"By that time £100,000 had been paid into 'Warren's' account at the Bank of England. Then another tiny mistake ruined all. A forged bill of exchange drawn on a city firm required two indorsements—only one was provided."

"I had been to the Bank of England one morning and drawn £10,000 in notes and gold, and about midday I returned for more money."

"Had I been five minutes earlier I should have escaped, but when I stepped to the counter, to my surprise I was surrounded by bank clerks and private detectives and arrested."

"I was marched to Bow Lane police station and then hustled into a van to avoid the excited city crowds, and driven to old Newgate prison. I was released after four months—my record number—at the Mansion House before I was sentenced with the others."

"They had to wait four months before they captured the rest in New York and Cuba."

"A plan was thought out of escape from the Old Bailey. Warders were to be bribed; but there was some muddle. I remember a hundred sovereigns, intended as a bribe, were upset from a bag in their haste, and scattered all over the roadway."

Edwin Noyes, with the assistance of Charles Cook, the author of "The Prisons of the World," has written a book, "One of Four in a Million of Money." The proceeds are to be devoted to stamping out gambling.

Worked Both Ways.

The man who prided himself on his keen perceptions watched the witness stand with intensity and scolded his head vigorously at the closing words of the bewildered witness.

"That man's concerned in it," said the keen observer to his friend. "Didn't you notice how his eyes shifted around?"

"How about this next one?" enquired the friend.

"He's guilty of something," asserted the keen observer. "No man stares at people in that bold, defiant way if he has a clear conscience."

MARRIAGE LICENSES. G. S. KIRKPATRICK, ISSUER OF Marriage Licenses, 42 Clarence St.

A Back Number. Joe Kerr, in Philadelphia Press. There was only one telephone in the Long Island hamlet, and I was told that the man who owned it was a justice of the peace, and a rather singular man. If he took a liking to a stranger that stranger could use the phone all day. If he didn't, he couldn't be used at all. I was further told that he had thoughts of running for governor of the state, and that that should be my cue to work him. Armed and equipped, I set out into the presence of the man I said: "I suppose you know that there is considerable talk about you just now?"

"Yes, I suppose so," was the reply. "I think the people realize that a man like you is needed in that position."

"Perhaps so."

"In fact, we have all come to the conclusion that there should be a new deal in politics."

"Yes."

"The grafters must take back seats and honest men come to the front. Let me say personally I hope you will secure the office of governor by the largest majority ever given a candidate."

"Governor? Why, I don't want to be governor," he replied.

"But I thought you did."

"That was four weeks ago. I've gone ahead since then, and now want to be president. No, sir, you can't use my telephone—not an inch of it. You seem to be a back number, sir, our education becomes a mere corpse, and if you want to communicate with anybody you can do it by yelling."

YOUNG COUPLES

are now looking for homes. If you have any nice houses for sale or to rent, better advertise them in the British Whig. Your chances of disposing of them are better through that course than any you could adopt because it goes without saying they will be consulting its columns to tell them of the most likely houses.

THE PARAGRAPH PULPIT

Unitarian. REV. C. W. CASSON.

A Religion For To-Day. A religion for to-day must be a religion of to-day. It must draw its inspiration from some source that is modern. It must lead upon the ever-ripening fruits of the present. The religious need of the world than its harvests are not satisfied the hunger of men to-day. To be fed we must sow and reap each year. And in religion equally we must depend for real life and strength upon the harvests that ripen in the days in which we live. It is this consciousness that gives the basis of healthy, progressive, useful religious life. It is the secret of strength in religion.

Inspired Teaching. Inspiration, like many diseases, is contagious. Very slight exposure will convey it, whether from the printed motto on the wall, the little verses on the language card, or from the spoken words of the teacher. Since it is conveyed by contact, it becomes a very important factor in our schools, and the spirits of children should be exposed to it in every way possible that they may catch it to be carried through life with them. Without it, our education becomes a mere corpse, which has the form of life but contains only death. Teaching without
