Daily Whig.WELCOME OLD BOYS.

This evening the Kingston Old Boys, and ever-youth Girls, of Toronto and Ottawa will make their fifth annual pilgrimage to the old town. Welcome, thrice welcome, to those who are more in love with the city than the inhabitants thereof and who appreciate the beauties and advantages far better. The spirit of welcome has won out against the prevailing sluggishness. For three years the City Council would do nothing to aid the Old Boys' Home Association. The tide is turning. This year the mayor is taking an active part in the reception, and there is hope for the good time when the home-coming will be, as in London, Guelph and other places, the event of the year. The saying that absence makes the heart grow fonder is true of Kingston's sons and daughters. Those who return are Kingston's best asset, for it has no plethora of admirers abroad, and a leaven of good will counts well.

PLAYING THE GAME.

The Canadian Courier is eager that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. R. L. Borden should copy the action agreed upon in the United States, to limit corporation contributions to campaign funds and to give them publicity. The Courier is too sweetly innocent for the Canadian political game. Does it imagine that any agreement or publicity would prevent such profuse contributions by underground passages as altered the whole face of politics in the three days preceding the election of June 8th in Ontario? The conservatives have the winning card in lavish funds from well-founded sources and the liquor men's open operations, and they will not give up these good things. The history of Kingston alone shows this. In the full tide of victory and Hon. G. W. Ross' defeat they challenged the liberals of Kingston to a purity campaign, and they were promptly met on the high-minded proposal. The thought of a government defeat in Kingston, above all places, in a bye-election, was beyond all thought, yet the liberal candidate won, and upon merit, since no charge of a breach of the almost-paritarian agreement was even mooted. When the recent general election came on the liberals proposed a renewal of the agreement, but the conservatives refused. They "played the game," and they say they have the money to play it again in the dominion election. The purity protestations of their leaders are arrant hypocrisy.

FORESTRY AT ITS BEST.

Gifford Pinchot the distinguished chief of the United States Forest Service, Washington, sends a circular on "What Forestry Has Done." Its pages show that by far the most successful forestry in the world is that of Germany, where the woods are treated as among the most important assets of the empire, to be controlled by a staff of experts, who cut trees only when they are worth cutting, always planting a seedling when a tree is felled. Let me take Prussia as an example of forestry at its best. In 1838 the yield was 200 feet, board measure, per acre; in 1865, 240 feet, in 1890, 520 feet; and in 1904, 650 feet. During the seventy-five years thus recorded, the quality of the product steadily improved, the percentage of saw timber increasing nearly three-fold. Measured in money, the results are even more gratifying. In 1850 the net return was 28 cents; in 1865, 72 cents; in 1890, $1.58; and in 1904, $2.50. Of course the rise in prices accounts for a good deal of this increase of profit. At $2.50 an acre, five per cent. income is yielded on an investment of $50 an acre as capital. For any other crop but trees the most of the woodlands would be valueless. When we learn that the Prussian forests cover an area of seven million acres, it is clear that our German friends are handsomely paid for bringing forestry to the level of an exact science.

But Germany states other than Prussia furnish us with figures even better than hers. Saxony, with a higher class of woods, and nearer markets yields a net return of $5.30 a year per acre. This is in its turn exceeded by Wurtemberg, which can boast a net profit of $6.60 an acre per annum, thus easily standing at the head of the world in state forestry.

LOOK AT HOME.

Periodically Board of Trade delegations split the Whig staff to make a stand for some forward movement for Kingston, or for protection to home industries. But is it not time the Board of Trade itself did something? What has been accomplished, say for a year past? What are its activities, anyway?

A son of Sir Hiram Maxim has invented a noiseless rifle. When discharged in a room with such force as to send the bullet several inches into the New York city directory, no other sound was to be heard than such a click as if it had failed to go off. If the apparatus is not too expensive to be universally adopted, we shall have the pleasure—already having smokeless powder—of firing in battle with nothing to offend either eye or ear.

Several suggestions have been made why Sir James Pliny Whitney received his new title. It has never occurred to the serives that he, as premier, introduced a vote of $100,000 for the battlefield scheme, that the Quebec premier was, according to custom of such visits to be knighted, and that it would be ungrateful, as well as a slight to the English "prime province," to pass it over in the line of honors, and Sir James was well qualified by public service and station for the recognition.

It is sufficient for some people that they drink anything called tea. Others prefer a standard brand like "Salada," which has a reputation for being good. The latter get more enjoyment out of life. In buying tea for the satisfaction you expect to get from its use it will pay to purchase "Salada." Avoid anything "just as good." Imitations are invariably of poor quality.

THE LIQUOR COMPACT.

The fining of more than half of the liquor licensees in Kingston for offences on one day not only shows a general non-observance of the law, under departmental connivance, but also a breach of a compact with the victuallers which, though unwritten, was as real as any agreement of "honor" could be. The conservative party went deliberately to "redeem" Kingston by the graces of tavern influences. The government was a silent partner, since it knew that convictions were not taking place as formerly under the liberal administration, and in spite of public charges that bars were filled regularly after hours and on Sunday. The license commissioners, instead of being the non-partisans promised when the conservatives were in opposition were among the most active of committeemen, that the government might not suffer from a lack of influences. Officials were zealous in sustaining an Indian list, and could spot one of the aborigines a mile off, but could not see the open doors of twenty-five taverns on election day, nor drunken men staggering from back or side entrances on Saturday nights and Sundays, at any time within three years. Now, when the government does act through its detectives and breaks the compact it is the involuntary result of a direct personal complaint, to expose the inaction of the license inspector, the more readily responded to because threats of a protest were off and there was no danger of an election for four years.

The government is not alone to blame for the carnival of drink and its dreadful effects on health since 1905. The whole city connived at it. The licensees lately proclaimed in France, when denouncing an extra tax, that they were the electoral chiefs, and could command the situation, if they chose. They assuredly can, with the approval of the people, when they have been done in Kingston. When the liberals were in power a constant agitation for restricting of bar privilages was kept up. Inspector Glidman was constantly attacked and spurred on. Since the conservatives assumed power, and selling liquor has been almost a go-as-you-please there has been absolute silence. The game was a conservative one and has been played to the limit, under both conditions, the stakes being election success, and the effects a greater wave of indulgence than has been, and the disgrace that of a city of churches. There have been about five convictions throughout the three years, while in the preceding three years there were over fifty, without half the occasion for them. And the five convictions were the results in nearly every case of an incidental exposure in a police court case of another kind.

EDITORIAL NOTES.
Mr. Ames should go to the scene of the coal mine fires, if he must have something lucid for his political peepshows.

The Toronto news applauds Hon. Frank Oliver for keeping out of the provincial election contest in Saskatchewan. When the Dominion contest is on, will Premier Whitney and his colleagues attend to their own knitting?

Secretary Spence of the Ontario Alliance says the Ontario government is languishing in regard to liquor law enforcement. Its broom "seems getting old"; its local officers are leaving too much to the special officers and the law is being flagrantly violated."

The Old Boys and Girls are welcomed back to their old haunts. We are sure they will all claim Kingston as the prettiest and coolest city in Canada. We have advocates of the old Limehouse City all over Canada and they cherish the best of wishes for "the old folks at home." We bid them welcome, again.
