The Man On Watch.

What has friend Duntley, the temperance lecturer, now to say about the way the taverns of Kingston town observed the liquor license law. I wonder? I observed the Lampan as I met him plodding his way home at night. "He would have us believe that the tavern keepers were the most law-abiding section of the community. Didn't I tell you a few weeks ago what the conditions were, and wasn't I right when I said what I could show? I do not blame the tavern keepers so much as I blame the inspector. It is well-known that the impression existed that there was an understanding that if liquor was not sold on Sunday, the inspector would not prosecute for Saturday night selling as he has said something to that effect on various occasions. And some of the drinking places had their doors wide open on Saturday night as a result. That tavern men may well feel sore on the inspector whose loose methods tempted them to go ahead and sell after seven o'clock on the evening preceding the Sabbath. They thought they were perfectly safe. Then along comes Parsons Burke who says that he will make things warm for the inspector, and the tavern keepers. Knight Whitney is forced by public opinion to send out spies, and look you what an amount of money leaves Kingston for Toronto as government fines. Had inspector Wright put the screws on the taverns at the outset, there would have been no round-up like that which ended in the police court last week. But suppose that the taverns lose nothing by the fines levied. They did a big Saturday night business ever since my old friend, William Glidden, was dethroned as license inspector, and accordingly their profit was large. That is the way I look at the matter," said the Lampan. "But whether Saturday night liquor selling will continue is to be seen."

The question of better wharf accommodation for steamboat traffic at this ancient port was the question the Bookseller wished to discuss with me when he stopped for a little chat. "The city," he said, "needs better wharves for the passenger and freight traffic. Neither Folger's nor Swift's wharf is sufficient. Both should be enlarged and improved. A good substantial landing place impresses visitors. I hope the town council will never give away the water lot in front of the buildings for some day that place may be greatly needed for a town building. It's such a pity that the town council years ago, had the fine old market battery in front of the town buildings razed, and gave part of the ground to the railway companies. People who were then enthusiastic over the destruction of that fine triangular stone wall, erected for defence, have lived to regret it. What a beautiful little park it would have made in front of the fine old town buildings instead of a railway yard. "It's such a pity!" said the Bookseller as he bade me good-night.—THE TOWN WATCHMAN.

For Decent Conditions.
Toronto World.
Dr. O. L. Howard, a celebrated entomologist, has been investigating the fly as a disseminator of disease germs; results are startling. In one city streets of fly paper were placed in stores, market stands, and private houses. These were collected every ten days, taken to the laboratory, the flies counted and the record filed. The largest number of flies caught in any section in 48 hours was 2,600. The number of bacteria found in a single fly varied from 550 to 6,000,000. This is appalling. The common house fly is an active agent in disseminating disease germs.

Now if householders could see the swarms of flies which flock uncovered cuts and carcasses in the ordinary meat markets, it would not be long till the demand for sanitary markets would be loud and persistent. When people learn that it is not only decent and desirable, but absolutely essential to the preservation of life and health, that food products be kept free from the contamination of flies and the dust and filth of the street, they will refuse to patronize markets which are not provided with facilities to protect food supplies against disease-breeding germs. Science has said that flies must go and sanitary markets would help to eliminate these disseminators of disease germs.

If That's Society.
The Rev. C. W. Gordon, of Winnipeg, better known as Ralph Connor, recently compared the honest and sincere ways of the frontier with the false and venomous ways of certain circles of society. He illuminated the comparison with a dialogue.
"I overheard this dialogue," he said, "at a reception that I once attended in Washington. The speakers were two grand dames—I believe that is the word—two powerful social leaders, one from Philadelphia, the other from New York."
"Well," said the first grand dame, "I must be off. I've got to go and see my mother."
"The second put up her lognette and drawled:
"Really—you don't mean to say you've got a mother living?"
"The first grand dame laughed, a high, thin laugh, with something biting, like acid, in it."
"Oh, yes," she said, "my mother is still alive, and she doesn't look a day older than you do, I assure you."

A Convention Chorus.
Winnipeg Tribune.
Here is a sidelight on the Democrat convention at Denver, at which many ladies were present. Would Canadians, even in the most intense throes of a political contest, take kindly to such an abundance? We trow not:
"The cowboys' band then struck up the campaign song. The gang is all on deck again. What the h— do we care? What the h— do we care? In which thousands joined in singing lustily."

A Musical Wedding.
An actor appeared one day at rehearsal in great agitation. A friend wanted to know what was the matter. "Why, sir, my donkey of a brother was married yesterday to a penniless girl named Sharp."
"My dear fellow," said the other, "don't fret; it was a musical wedding."

Pulled Up Short.

New York Times.
Prof. Charles Zueblin, of the University of Chicago, was retreating at a dinner his belief that most American philanthropy failed of its object. "Many a philanthropist, his heart beating with love of his fellow man, would be pulled up with a round turn," said Prof. Zueblin, "if he knew what really became of the last hundred or the last thousand that he gave to charity."

Yes, he would be taken as completely about as the young man who said proudly to his girl in the moonlight: "Tell me, my own, when did you first discover that you loved me?" "When I found myself getting angry every time anyone called you a fool," she replied.

Professional Picker.

Captain Spencer, senior prison missioner of the Church Army, tells a story of a certain convict's philosophic view of his existence. "Well, my man," asked Captain Spencer, "what do you do when you are out of prison?" "Well," said the convict, "in spring I does a bit of pea-picking, and in the summer time I does a bit of fruit-picking." "Oh!" said the captain, "what happens after that?" "Well, now, mister," replied the convict, "I may as well be honest and tell you that in winter time I does a bit of pocket-picking." The missioner, in amazement, asked finally, "And what happens then?" "The convict answered laconically: "Why, here I am doing a bit of oakum-picking."

Workhouse Romance.

Rather an unusual application was made to the guardians of the poor-house at Willesden, England, by an elderly inmate, who has several times taken his discharge and remained out for weeks together. He was "court-ting" an old lady who had some freehold land, and he asked the board to provide him with a black coat and vest, a light pair of trousers, and a pair of brown boots, so that he might get married. The committee accepted the application.

Still One Way.

"Yes," said the Suffragist on the platform, "women have been wronged for ages. They have suffered in a thousand ways."
"There is one way in which they have never suffered," said a meek-looking man, standing up in the rear of the hall.
"What way is that?" demanded the Suffragist.
"They have never suffered in silence."

Even Better Pleased.

A commercial traveller, having got settlement of a long-standing account with a shopkeeper, invited him out to dine. "Na, na," said the tradesman, "I'll never gang to an inn; but just tell me how much it will cost ye to get me my dinner." "Oh," said the traveller, "perhaps three or four shillings." "Very well, then," replied the economist, "give me the four shillings and I'll be just as well pleased as if I'd got the dinner."

The Orphan Teacher.

"What is an orphan?" asked the teacher.
"None of the children seemed to know."
"Well, I'm an orphan," said the teacher, "and I'm too plain to attend a ball."
"A hand helped up and the other exclaimed:
"An orphan is a woman that wants to get married and can't."

Reversed Ambition.

"It used to be the height of my ambition to own a motor-boat," said the worried-looking man.
"And what is the height of your ambition now?" asked his friend.
"To sell it."

Some merchants go to church on Sunday with bibles under their arms; that's one form of advertising.

The really good, honest merchants, however, put their advertisement in the Whig, where it may be seen of men and accomplish much good. It doesn't require large space always, to make advertising pay. The small business can be successfully advertised in a small way. That reduces the outlay, and makes the result profitable. The Whig will insert the advertisement of any commercial business on the following basis:

ONE INCH
6 months, every day --- $14.40
6 months, every other day 8.64
1 year, every day --- 24.00
1 year, every other day -- 14.40

6 months, every day --- $28.80
6 months, every other day 17.28
1 year, every day --- 48.00
