

DOVER REPEATS ITS HISTORY IN PAGEANT.

London, July 30.

Five thousand of the school children of the ancient town were spectators of the first complete representation of the Dover pageant, on Saturday afternoon. Young faces and shrill voices showed, as Louis N. Parker's glowing spectacle unfolded itself, how the realization of the great part which bygone citizens of Dover had played in illuminating the scroll of English history, touched the quick imagination of the young generation.

During this week, the pageant will daily minister to the local patriotism of Dover and the neighbouring parts of Kent! The week's performances will serve as rehearsals for next week's series of complete and perfect representations, to which lovers of the historic picturesqueness from far and near will crowd.

It is with English history in its foreign relations, especially with France, that Dover, "the gate of England" and its key, has been most notably concerned. Mr. Parker illustrates this. In the first episode King Arthur defies the emissary of the Roman Emperor Lucius. The second is the

WHEAT FOR RUSSIA.

Why the Canadian Article is in Demand.

Saturday Night.

Two large cargoes of grain have gone out of Montreal on a mission which would at the first glance seem to be equivalent to that of carrying coal to Newcastle. One steamer carried a full cargo of wheat to the capital of that great wheat-growing rival of the Canadian west, Russia, while the second, which left port to-day, carried a similar load to ports along the Mediterranean and not far from the great wheat belts of the Russian empire. Each of the two, the Norwegian steamship Herm, and the Danish steamship Nordracer, carried 27,000 quarters of wheat.

A little explanation, however, takes away the apparent absurdity of the matter. The cargoes in question are composed of what is known as Durum wheat in the country where it is grown, the states of Minnesota, Dakota; and Macaroni wheat on the seaboard. It is a very large hard wheat, of high quality, but not suitable for flour, but very well suited for bread. It is shipped across the Atlantic, therefore, to Marseilles and ports of Italy and Greece, where the manufacture of macaroni is extensively carried on. The Russians too, it appears, are now going heavily into the consumption of that delicacy, and are proving very successful indeed in the manufacture of it. They must come to America for this special kind of wheat, however, and hence the recent shipment of some two hundred thousand bushels of Durum wheat through the port of Montreal to St. Petersburg.

In past years, almost all the trans-Atlantic shipments of this grain went through United States ports and these two are among the largest of the kind which have come via Montreal. Messrs. Wight and Esdale are the shippers here. They have also another tramp steamship, the Sandseed, in port at the present time, loading wheat for Europe.

Dodging Past Mistakes.

Toronto Globe.

Not only the Canadian Northern, but the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Pacific, and possibly the Great Northern, want to reach Hudson's Bay. The government should not favor one above the others. A government line with running powers for all the systems might solve the problem without establishing the monopolistic conditions which have retarded development in many parts of the dominion. There will be no likelihood of a repetition of past mistakes in a matter of so much moment in Canada's transportation development.

Cousins Political Rivals.

That was an interesting contest in the Cannington constituency of Saskatchewan. The sitting member was John D. Stewart, son of Duncan Stewart, Stratford, and his opponent was Peter McLean, a second cousin and neighbor at Ardoch. Both were former residents of North Easthope, Ontario, and good friends, if recent political rivalry has not marred the relationship. Mr. Stewart retains the seat by a substantial majority.

"Silver Plate that Wears"
Ice Cream Forks
Fancy serving pieces; knives, forks, spoons, etc., always in good taste, are marked

"1847 ROGERS' BROS."

A great variety of exquisite patterns noted for quality.
SOLO LEADING DEALERS
Silver, steel, platters, butter dishes, sugar bowls, to be right, should be made by MERIDEN BRITISH CO.

Many a young man's unsteadiness is due to a steady income.

SOMETHING LIKE IT,

But He Did Not Hit on the Right Name.

Saturday Night.

A young Toronto man was the object of day telling a lady friend of his acquaintance. "Your friend," said the lady, "is married," said the lady, "and she isn't?" "Yes," answered the young man, "but she is very well. Her husband is a fine fellow, well educated, and today, carried a similar load to ports along the Mediterranean and not far from the great wheat belts of the Russian empire. Each of the two, the Norwegian steamship Herm, and the Danish steamship Nordracer, carried 27,000 quarters of wheat.

The lady looked inquiring at him and then said: "You mean he used that much as a fertilizer?"

"No," said the young man, "he had that much of his own farm-grown, it you know."

The lady, who is a native of a small town in Western Ontario, knew that rock salt does not grow on trees like apples, nor yet in the ground like turnips. Moreover, she also knew that there are no salt wells in the vicinity of the farm in question; so, after judging her brains for a few seconds, she said: "I wonder if you mean alike?"

"Oh, yes," said he, "that is it, I guess. I knew it sounded something like that."

Look In Your Mirror.

If there appears on your face any blemishes, pimples, boils, blisters or other skin diseases you know at once your blood is impure. Perfectly pure blood means an absolutely clear complexion. You can have such blood by using Wade's Iron Tonic Pills (Laxative). This remedy cleanses and enriches the blood.

They are a great nerve strengthener and blood maker. In boxes, 25c. at Wade's drug store. Money back if not satisfactory.

Radical Proceeding.

Toronto News.

Australia, within two days, rushed through a bill to give everybody over sixty-five years of age a pension of $2.50 a week. That is a pretty good beginning. Human nature seems to have a great taste for anything obtained with effort, and perhaps this next thing will be a demand that this tax upon industry and frugality be doubled, or begin at the age of sixty or fifty-five, even fifty.

More cases of sick headache, biliousness, constipation, can be cured in less time, with less medicine, and for less money, by using Carter's Little Liver Pills than by any other means. If some men would use as much effort in trying to stand as they do to fall, this old world would not have so many human wrecks.

PLACE
WATCH
The Name of
Black Watch
On a Tag on a Plug of
Black Chewing Tobacco
Stands for Quality.

trothued, written by the French poet Louis Timorelli and played in French by a party of French ladies and gentlemen from Douai. There passes before the young queen a procession of the French ladies who have worn the English crown—a picture within a picture, a charming device which enlivens the illustration of many picturesque incidents and personages.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and costumed.

Two thousand odd residents of Dover and the neighborhood take part. Their devotion to the preparations, the beauty and richness of the costumes they have provided, in many cases at their own cost, show a pride of patriotism and a splendid spirit which, and not the least noteworthy feature is the excellent elocution with which the dialogue is spoken.

Finally, there is a grand tableau in which the forty-four other Dovers—American and colonial daughter towns—figure in a grand apotheosis of the old port. It is the most ambitious of Mr. Parker's pageants, beautifully produced and