The Power Of The Ad.

Washington Star. Lillian B. Hill, the well-known writer of humorous advertisements, said at one of the convention dinners in Denver: "Advertising lends itself to almost any imaginable purpose. For instance, at Sea Beach, the other week, a confecioner found himself with a great number of stale tarts on hand. He rid himself of these tarts, and of all his fresh ones besides, by inserting the following advertisement in the local press:

"'PERSONAL-A young man agrecable exterior and ample means de sires to form the acquaintance of lady. Object matrimony. Beauty and as a good character and an amiable disa. position.
