HE IS A CANDIDATE
THE MAN WHO BEAT OUT STANDARD OIL.

Nominee of the Independent Party For the United States Presidency—He Will Make Things Warm.
 No less than six parties have nominated candidates for the presidency of the United States.
 Besides the regular republican and democrat nominees, candidates have been placed in the field by populists, socialists, prohibitionists, and independence party.
 The latter is the creation of W. R. Hearst, who owns a number of daily papers in different cities. "Honest Tom Higen" of Springfield, Mass., the nominee of the party appears, however, to possess a distinct personality of his own. Current literature for September gives the following exceedingly interesting sketch of his career:
 The story of Higen begins with axle grease. That is a side product manufactured by the Standard Oil. The child Higen, father of Thomas, was a few years by trade and something of a chemist by instinct. He invented an axle grease and four of his sons formed a company to manufacture and sell it. All of them had been, up to that time (1888) clerks in a clothing store in Albany. The combined capital they managed to raise was $500. A month or two after they started, a cauldron of axle grease caught fire, and burned up the whole plant, the older Higen barely escaping with his life. Then Thomas, Gustave, Henry, and George got together to make an inventory of their resources. Thomas had an old fiddle which his father had brought from Germany. Gustave had a diamond pin, Henry had $25 in the bank, George had credit enough to borrow $20. They raised about $100 altogether and started the business again. When they made a stock of the axle-grease they got up with the milkman in the early morning, walked to the market-place where the farmers came with their products, and went around selling the grease to them. It was good grease and the farmers found it out. In a few months a genuine demand had been created, and Thomas and Gustave were able to redeem the fiddle and the diamond pin at the pawnbroker's. In ten years the four brothers erected the largest axle-grease factory in the country. It made an offer to buy out the Four Brothers Company for $600,000. They had the temerity to refuse. They wanted to keep on developing it and hand it down to their children. Then began the war.

The Standard Oil people, unable to crush the business by ordinary competition, sent agents to the country dealers to tell them that if they did not quit handling the axle grease of the Four Brothers Company they would not be able to get kerosene to sell. That was a serious threat, of course. The Higen men met it promptly. They went to the local business men, and announced their readiness to supply kerosene to the country stores. That was in 1892. The following year they extended their operations to New England, establishing a distributing centre in Springfield, Mass. Thomas, the senior of the brothers, (only three of whom are now living) went to Springfield, to take personal charge there. The Standard Oil began to cut rates, and the Four Brothers met them as long as they dared. The price went from 1 1/2 cents a gallon to 9, then to 8 1/2, then to 8, then to 7 1/2, then to 7, at which price it was being sold again actual loss. The Four Brothers appealed to customers to stand by them, and kept their price at 8 cents. Their customers were loyal, and the labor unions took up their cause also. They kept their footing and made things interesting for the enemy. They came near getting a law through the Legislature requiring all corporations to sell their commodities in all parts of the state at prices differing only by the amount of the difference in freight rates. Thomas Higen in this way got into the political game. The way to a presidential nomination was, for him, made smooth and easy by axle-grease and oil. Two years ago, being a democrat, he was nominated, much to his surprise, for State Auditor on the democratic ticket. When, one year ago, Henry M. Whitney was nominated by the democratic party, declaring that Whitney was a tool of the Standard Oil. Mr. Hearst's Independence League thereupon nominated Higen for Governor. He made a phenomenal run, greatly outstripping the rest of the league's ticket, and polling the second largest vote for governor, Whitney being third and the republican candidate first.

That is why Thomas Higen came to be nominated for president.
 He is half German and half Irish. His father was identified with the revolutionists in Germany in 1848, and when the movement failed he followed the example of Carl Schurz and came to the United States. He married an Irish lass, Catherine McNally, in Albany, and then went out to Indiana to keep a country store. Eleven children blessed the union, Thomas being coming in 1838. He has had to pick up most of his education as he went along, and a good share of that he picked up is of a musical sort. He is proficient on the violin, and he is a composer of music. One of his compositions, entitled "Language of the Soul," is described as "an exquisite love reverie," another is "a stirring scottische," a favorite selection for bands in the locality of Springfield, and perhaps elsewhere.

STIRRING SCOTTISCH.
 His efforts at speech-making have been successful because of their freedom from oratorical effort. He just talks and tells his story of "How I fought the Octopus." Says the Springfield Republican: "His manner is one of the utmost simplicity and directness. There is no appearance of manner or affectation. In fact his simple, straightforward way of speaking, at times seeming to reveal a bit of stage fright, has been one of his strongest assets. Whenever he has spoken all who have listened, whatever their political beliefs might have been, have been impressed with the apparent honesty of Mr. Higen's utterances. He appears on the platform to be a retiring, bashful business man whom some strange fate has suddenly dragged into the limelight, much against his own will, and compelled to address the multitude."

One Durable Pavement.
 New York Sun.
 Mankato, Minn., has solved the problem of finding a durable pavement at small expense, and one that can be used on steep grades as readily as on a level surface.
 First the driveway was narrowed to 30 feet, curbed, guttered and boulevarded. Then it was excavated to the depth of six inches and surfaced. Five inches of dry crushed limestone one and a half to two inches in diameter was put on and rolled down with a ten-ton roller.
 Boiling tar from the local gas works was applied until the entire surface was covered. Then says the cement Age, a layer of boiler slag was put on to the inch and a quarter in diameter, mixed with coarse gravel, was applied on the surface in the proportion of three parts of stone to one of gravel. This was first mixed on a platform and then thoroughly mixed with the tar and applied on the surface two inches thick and tamped into place to conform with the surface of the street.
 Dry domestic cement was then applied to the surface and the street was again rolled. The coating of sand was then applied and the roller again used. The pavement was allowed to stand for two weeks before the street was thrown open to travel.
 The street was 80 cents a lineal foot to the property owners on each side of the street, or rather would have been had the entire cost been assessed against them. The street has a practically waterproof pavement six inches thick, and it is immune from the elements to attack the surface. The pavement has now stood two winters, and shows not the slightest sign of wear. It gives off no dust in summer, although it is not sprinkled.

Human Vibrations.
 Dr. Baraduc, of Paris, has been lecturing, says the Health Record, at the Theosophical society's rooms, in London, on human vibration. He showed many photographs of these alleged vibrations by placing a sensitized film on one of the nerve centers.
 He usually places the film at night and leaves it till morning. The vibrations of the subject throw the nitrate of silver on the film into a corresponding form of vibration, which is found registered on the film when developed, just as the light reflected from an object through the lens of a camera registers the form of that object.
 Dr. Baraduc had also many pictures taken in the ordinary way by means of the camera. In these various states of emotion are shown. Sudden anger appears as a sort of whirling shower of sparks and vapor. A state of high spiritual contemplation produces a misty globe of light some way above the sitter's head.
 In one picture the etheric double of a woman kneeling in prayer is shown. According to the doctor, the etheric cosmic forces are continually streaming into us and passing to the elements, or streaming out, being dissipated, or mingling again with the general stream.
 One photograph showed the vibration of telepathic communication—some had lines in ribbons of light, showing attachment. In another case the doctor's wife passed away, the line of which had always appeared between them is seen for the first time broken.

The Parisian Game.
 Grace Margaret Gould, fashion editor of Woman's Home Companion, tells in the September number of the ways the Parisian dressmaking establishments sell their goods to American women. Here is one rule she saw worked in a big establishment:
 "There was a sudden and evident commotion among the employees. The Princess! The Princess! American eyes began to bulge. Out from a magnificent equipage stepped a regally gowned lady, attended by footmen and maid, and received by the whole bowing establishment, to the neglect of other customers. She was in a gracious mood this day, and easy to please, praising their past efforts and selecting several new creations without regard to cost. After she had made her departure, amid like ceremonies, there was no need of the spokeswoman bothering her head over English. Every American woman present wanted a copy of the one the princess had bought, and she got it after such pleading and at a price far beyond the limit she had set. And the point is this, The Princess was not a French girl, an employee of the house. Every French gown has two prices—An American price and a French price. It is needless to say which is the greater price."

California's Big Apricot Crop.
 With trees bending under the burden of the heaviest crop in years—perhaps the greatest in the history of the state—the harvest of apricots in California is at its height, says the Los Angeles Times.
 It is estimated that the green crop will total 120,000 tons, and that the return to growers will be $1,250,000. The pie and sauce possibilities are appalling. Because of rapidity of ripening possibly 10 per cent of the crop will not be gathered. The fruit is exceptionally luscious.

STORY OF CRIME
NOVEL METHOD ADOPTED BY EXPERT IN LUNACY.

Woman Told of Shooting Under Mesmeric Suggestion—Doctor Was Willing to Try the Experiment Again.
 New York, Sept. 3.—Hypnotism was injected into the testimony which is being taken by the commission in lunacy appointed by Judge Foster, of general sessions, to determine whether Mrs. Charlotte Hitecock was sane or insane when she killed her husband and whether she is sane or insane now. While in a "submerged unconscious" condition, brought about by hypnotic suggestion, according to the testimony, Mrs. Hitecock told the real story of the shooting. It was that her husband had shot her and that he shot himself.
 This testimony, which was given by Dr. Van Gieson, of 134 East Fifty-ninth street, who is connected with the research laboratory of the health department, was listened to with interest by the commission—Drs. Carlos Macdonald, Allan McLane Hamilton and Frank Robertson, all alienists. The commissioners' questions to Dr. Van Gieson said that they would scrutinize the story, Dr. Hamilton remarking that of course they would look for deceit or shamming on the part of the subject for the purpose of evading the truth and not with any view of imputing dishonesty to any one.
 Dr. Van Gieson stuck to his guns. He was willing for the benefit of the commission to try the experiment again. He did not know it would be successful, but he had an air of confidence. The commission didn't seem inclined to listen to the suggestion, and Mr. Jerome's representative, Mr. DuVivier, protested that he didn't think a defendant should be hypnotized into giving testimony for herself, to which Dr. Van Gieson replied that a defendant should be "allowed" to give her testimony.
 Mrs. Hitecock and her husband, who was a printer, lived at 729 East Third street, and on November 20th he was killed. He had two bullets in the head, and there were four in Mrs. Hitecock's body.

"Sunny"—Empress of Russia.
 "The most beautiful queen on any throne she has long been called," King George V. thus begins his marvelous life story of the Tsaritsa of Russia in the September Woman's Home Companion. "She is tall and stately; her hair is luxuriant and rich in color. Eyes that some call blue and some call green look out through long, dark, heavy-lashed and in them lies a great sadness, an appealing wistfulness touched with regret, a silent melancholy. Yet as a child she was known as 'Sunny.' Her life story has never been told in English. This is a wonderful romance of a poor little German princess becoming a great sovereign, the co-ruler of one of the vastest empires on earth, the mistress of a fabulously rich and bewilderingly extravagant court, and perhaps the most powerful woman in Europe. After a quiet girlhood, and a struggle to maintain appearances, she was courted by a wayward gallant, heir to a mighty throne, whose heart she won, and who, a royal wooer, and he putting aside the less noble loves of his reckless, youthful days, pledged himself to her, persistently courted her against wide opposition, turned a deaf ear to the councils of emperors and queens who tried to dissuade her, and, after a year of battling with diplomatic intrigue and personal restraint he carried his purpose, married the German princess, who truly was the bride of his heart, and raised her from the obscurity of her home to the rank of Empress. This is the story of Princess Alix of Hesse whom Nicholas II. made Tsaritsa of Russia."

Wanted to Know.
 Nat Goodwin, the actor, has a friend who owns a country place in Maine that is ten miles from a railroad station or telegraph office, a fact of which Goodwin is duly cognizant. Now the player used often to visit this friend, whom he has ever found a lavishly hospitable host, and who has time and time again advised that there is a room at the place in Maine ready for him whenever he cares to occupy it.
 On one occasion Goodwin cabled from London:
 "May I stay over the third Sunday in September?"
 The friend paid five dollars to the messenger who brought the telegram, likewise a sum necessary to defray the cost of his reply: "Of course, but don't cable."
 Whereupon Goodwin innocently sent this query by cable, "Why not?"

Sagacity of Rats.
 The average rat possesses extraordinary sagacity. On a sailing ship bound for Calcutta from Cape Town some years ago it was decided to try to reduce the number of rats which had boarded the vessel at the latter port. The end of an ordinary cask was planned perfectly smooth, coated with grease and a meat bait tacked in the center. The end was fixed on with two nails, balanced so that should anything touch it off the center it would go down. The cask was partly filled with water, and buried in the ballast to within a few inches of the top. The first night more than two hundred rats were caught, the second night few, the third night none were caught. It was assumed by the marks of the rats feet in the grease and the missing bait that they had discovered the exact centre and took the bait as they liked. Half an inch on either side of the centre meant death.

To Keep Salt Dry.
 "To prevent salt in saltcellars from becoming damp and lumpy, when filling them put in ten to twelve pieces of rice," says Woman's Home Companion for September. "This will not come through the holes in the cover of the saltcellars, but will break the lumps of salt and gather the moisture; thus the salt is always dry and fine."

LAURIER WILL WIN!
Highest Message to Liberals of Eastern Canada.

(Hon. Walter Scott, Premier of Saskatchewan.)
 "It was charged that I obeyed Laurier in holding the elections. I have contradicted the charge straightly and emphatically. It is positively untrue. The dissolution was decided on by myself and my colleagues for excellent reasons, abundant reason even, four-fold reasons, in fact, in the Redistribution, the railway situation, the Rural Municipal policy and our telephone programme,—it was decided on—and the elections were held to suit the needs of the people of Saskatchewan without regard to any other interest; and without the most remote suggestion from Sir Wilfrid Laurier or anybody else. But if our opponents are to be believed, if we may draw conclusions from the things we heard and saw during our campaign, then it would seem plain that the Saskatchewan result is a sign of the result to be expected when the leader whom we all love and revere, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the leader who in this Dominion in Canada is admitted by all parties without exception to be the greatest color or politics to stand in a class all by himself, admirable, irreproachable, peerless—a sign of the result to be expected when our beloved leader in the Dominion realm next submits himself and his policy to the people. In other words, your humble servant may have done a thing to materially influence the question whether progressive Liberal rule or reactionary Tory rule shall prevail in Canada in future. Guilty or not in any degree to the people? In other words, if it is for the people of Saskatchewan to elect, this province which of all provinces has in the past decade profited the most by the sane and successful policy of Laurier on the tariff, on immigration, on the public lands, on railways, and especially his courageous Hudson's Bay Railway programme? If found guilty I shall not complain: If anything that I have done or may be in favor of the province be able to do helps in any degree to preserve for Saskatchewan a continuance of Laurier and his policy I am confident that it will not be counted against me in the reckoning by this fair young province whose interests and whose welfare are worthy of some sacrifice and some unselfish devotion on the part of us all."

He Was Not A Humorist.
 Montreal Herald.
 Dr. August McLennan, M.P. who died yesterday was a prime favorite with his fellow members of the House of Commons. He was doctor all over, kindly, considerate, cheerful and dignified. He lost all claim to being considered a humorist on account of a story told at the expense of Sir Herbert Tupper. Sir Herbert was addressing a joint meeting in Inverness county, the doctor's riding, and the interruptions were coming too frequent and too hostile, so Sir Herbert said to the doctor, in an aside, "Mac, call off your dogs." The doctor straightened out the links in his feet somehow, raised his fist above that and shouted, "Men of Inverness, he calls you dogs!" Sir Herbert escaped, the record says, through the window.
