The Better Religion.

If any man's religion gives to him more of love and kindness and sympathy than mine gives to me, his is the better religion. Even though I may believe and be convinced to my own complete satisfaction that I have the larger truth and the broader view and the later revelation, I am compelled to give him precedence as a man who has achieved and acquired more than I. And just as soon as I find that the Unitarian faith does not give to men the most enlarged sympathies, the broadest love and the most helpful life, I would abandon its proclamation.
