Scandal His Only Plea.

Woodstock Sentinel-Review. It is very good of Mr. Borden to bring the leaders of the conservative parties in the various provinces to his side in the campaign, and thus give the people an opportunity of seeing and hearing them. We are sure the people will feel duly grateful for such intellectual feasts as may be spread before them in this way-by Premier Roblin, of Manitoba, for instance, whose refined and elevating humor must have left quite as deep an impression on his hearers as the vigor of his eloquence-but, really, the electors have a right to expect something more. Mr. Borden is asking the electors to turn out a government under which, during the past twelve years, the country has undergone development at a rate and in a way that have attracted the attention of the civilized world and resulted in Canada taking her place among the nations of the earth. Before taking such a critical step, the electors have a right to know what they are to have in its place. Surely they are en-titled to that. Mr. Borden offers himself. He is a very respectable gentleman and one against whom, personally, there is not a great deal to be said, and no great disposition to say anything. But a respectable gentieman is, fortunately, no unusual thing in this Canada of ours. If the only qualification for the premiership was personal respectability, the country would be full of eligible candidates. But what else has Mr. Borden, to offer? His claims to superior purity may be set aside. Such claims are always put forth by men who are in opposition. It is like making a virtue of a necessity. More than that, Mr. Borden might be as straight as a telephone pole and as white as an Easter lily, and yet be wholly unable to give any guarantee of a pure government. If the opposition under his leadership has become so demoralized that he simply cannot bring himself to be found associating with its leading and dominating spirits, what would happen if the party were in power? The fact that Mr. Borden has invited the conservative leaders of the provinces to his side to escape association with his own followers, throws a queer light on his that he cannot trust his own party Charles Fairchild & Co., say traders even in opposition. What would happen if the spoils of office were within What else has Mr. Borden to offer
