THE BOARD OF HEALTH

ASKS THE CITY COUNCIL TO MEET SHORTLY,

And Take Action on Its Request Regarding Compulsory Vaccination—The Disease Must Be Stamped Out at Once.

The board of health on Monday afternoon discussed the small-pox situation, and decided that besides immediate isolation of cases of the disease and quarantining those known to have been in close contact with it, the other way of wiping out the disease in a short time was vaccination of everyone in Kingston. Accordingly, Mayor Ross was asked to call a special meeting of the city council to discuss the board's recent request for the enforcement of compulsory vaccination. Dr. W. T. Connell, who was brought to the meeting by a board of trade delegation, strongly recommended vaccination and re-vaccination as the quickest way of getting rid of small-pox.

There were present at the meeting: S. S. Corbett, (chairman), Mayor Ross, Francis King, Dr. Knight, John Lemmon, Dr. Evans, Medical Health Officer Bell, Sanitary Inspector Gordon and Assistant Sanitary Inspector McCammon.

Regarding vaccination of children, Dr. Knight said he had been in a school room last week. He asked how many had been vaccinated, and found that out of a large class, only two or three had not been vaccinated. He thought there would be very few children to vaccinate very soon.

Medical Health Officer Bell reported to the board regarding the new small-pox cases. On Friday night, he had telephoned to Toronto to Dr. Hodgett, of the provincial board of health, and he had sent down Inspector Bell, an expert of that board, who had examined the cases and pronounced them all small-pox.

The latest case (the twelfth new one) the health officer said was a boy who attended St. Mary's school. He had ordered the school closed, and this had been done for the second time. Rev. Father Hanley, chairman of the separate school board, assured the health officer that the board would require certificates of successful vaccination before any pupils were admitted back to school. The health officer said the school would be kept closed in the meantime.

Dr. Bell said that Judge Price, in discussing the small-pox situation with him, stated that he paid $1,500 a year in taxes, and he was willing to pay an extra amount for people who persistently refused to be vaccinated. Those people, he claimed, should pay all expenses that might be incurred through their action. It wasn't fair to put a burden upon the citizens in general, when it might be avoided by taking the means of prevention recommended by the great majority of medical men.

The health officer recommended that the medical men of the city be called together, and that they discuss the situation, and take every possible step to aid the board of health in stamping out the disease.

Dr. Evans said that the first thing to do was to establish proper quarantines and isolation. The great difficulty the health officer was up against was the concealment of cases by doctors, and by people themselves. He was sure that there were cases of small-pox walking the streets, to-day. He had seen what certainly looked like that disease, and so had Chairman Corbett. The latter said he had since enquired about one referred to by Dr. Evans and found that the young man had the trouble for years. Another case was mentioned by Dr. Evans, and the health officer will look after it.

Dr. Evans insisted that the public places where several cases had been very exposed, should be quarantined. No chance should be taken, he said.

A delegation from the board of trade visited the meeting at this juncture. H. W. Richardson, president, stated that the merchants of the city were anxious that the disease should be stayed as soon as possible, as it would seriously affect the business of the city. They had consulted Dr. W. T. Connell, bacteriologist at Queen's, as to the best means of stamping out the disease in a short time, and the doctor was present to give the board of health any advice that it might wish.

Dr. Connell stated that he had very little to say. He emphasized the necessity of thorough vaccination and re-vaccination. This, along with measures of isolation would quickly stamp out the disease, because it would render immune what was susceptible to its influence. He, therefore, strongly advocated compulsory vaccination. Mr. King pointed out that the board of education had held over for nearly a month the board of health's request that it require all the school children to be vaccinated and then had not acceded to the request. The city council, too, had as yet taken no action that the provisions of the health act be carried out. Thus the board was handicapped. Mr. King said he had talked with most of the doctors in the city, and they were strongly in favor of vaccination. As a proof of this nearly all of them had their families vaccinated. He met only one doctor here, who opposed vaccination, but he said he would vote for vaccination if it could be shown that the vaccine used is pure.

Mayor Ross spoke regarding the blame put upon the city council for not taking earlier action. The matter was to have come up at the last meeting, but unfortunately there was no quorum. The council, he said, had not shirked the matter, at all. Mayor Ross said he had been met by a member of the board of health who said to him: "Dr. Ross I would like to see you go to the people for a second term after voting for compulsory vaccination." The mayor said he wasn't afraid to face the people after voting for compulsory vaccination. He would do his duty as he saw it, and act in the best interests of the people. Mayor Ross said that he had evidence that a member of the board of health who was opposed to vaccination, had written a vaccine firm, offering to recommend their vaccine to the board of health if they would re-imburse him for so doing. He could get the letter and produce it whenever he wanted.

Mr. King and Dr. Knight wanted to know who the member was. Mayor Ross laughingly said that if the boot didn't fit, they needn't wear it.

Dr. Knight said that any member of the board of health opposed to vaccination should resign, because the law is there providing for vaccination. As to the city council, he held that it had been somewhat negligent, in not acting upon the board's request early. A special meeting should have been called.

Dr. Evans challenged Mayor Ross to produce the letter alleged to have been written to a vaccine firm. He would be delighted to see it. On motion of Mr. King, seconded by Dr. Knight, the board decided to request the mayor to call a special meeting of the city council to consider the board's request regarding compulsory vaccination; that the board send a delegation to wait upon the council, at this special meeting, and that Dean Connell, of Queen's medical faculty, be invited to appoint a medical deputation to accompany the board's delegation.

The yeas and nays were called upon the motion at Dr. Evans' request and the motion was carried by a vote of five to one. Dr. Evans voting nay.

The board decided to have several public places thoroughly fumigated, but not to close them. The health officer thought fumigation would be sufficient. Dr. Evans said that if anything happened the board would be criminally responsible.

A discussion arose as to where the vaccine should be purchased. The law provides that the hospital must furnish the vaccine. The medical health officer stated that if it was got at the hospitals, perhaps only one druggist would benefit, and the others would have their vaccine on their hands. Dr. Knight said it was better to abide by the act.

Chairman Corbett said that the board needn't bother about large supplies of vaccine so long as the board of education and the city council did not enforce compulsory vaccination.

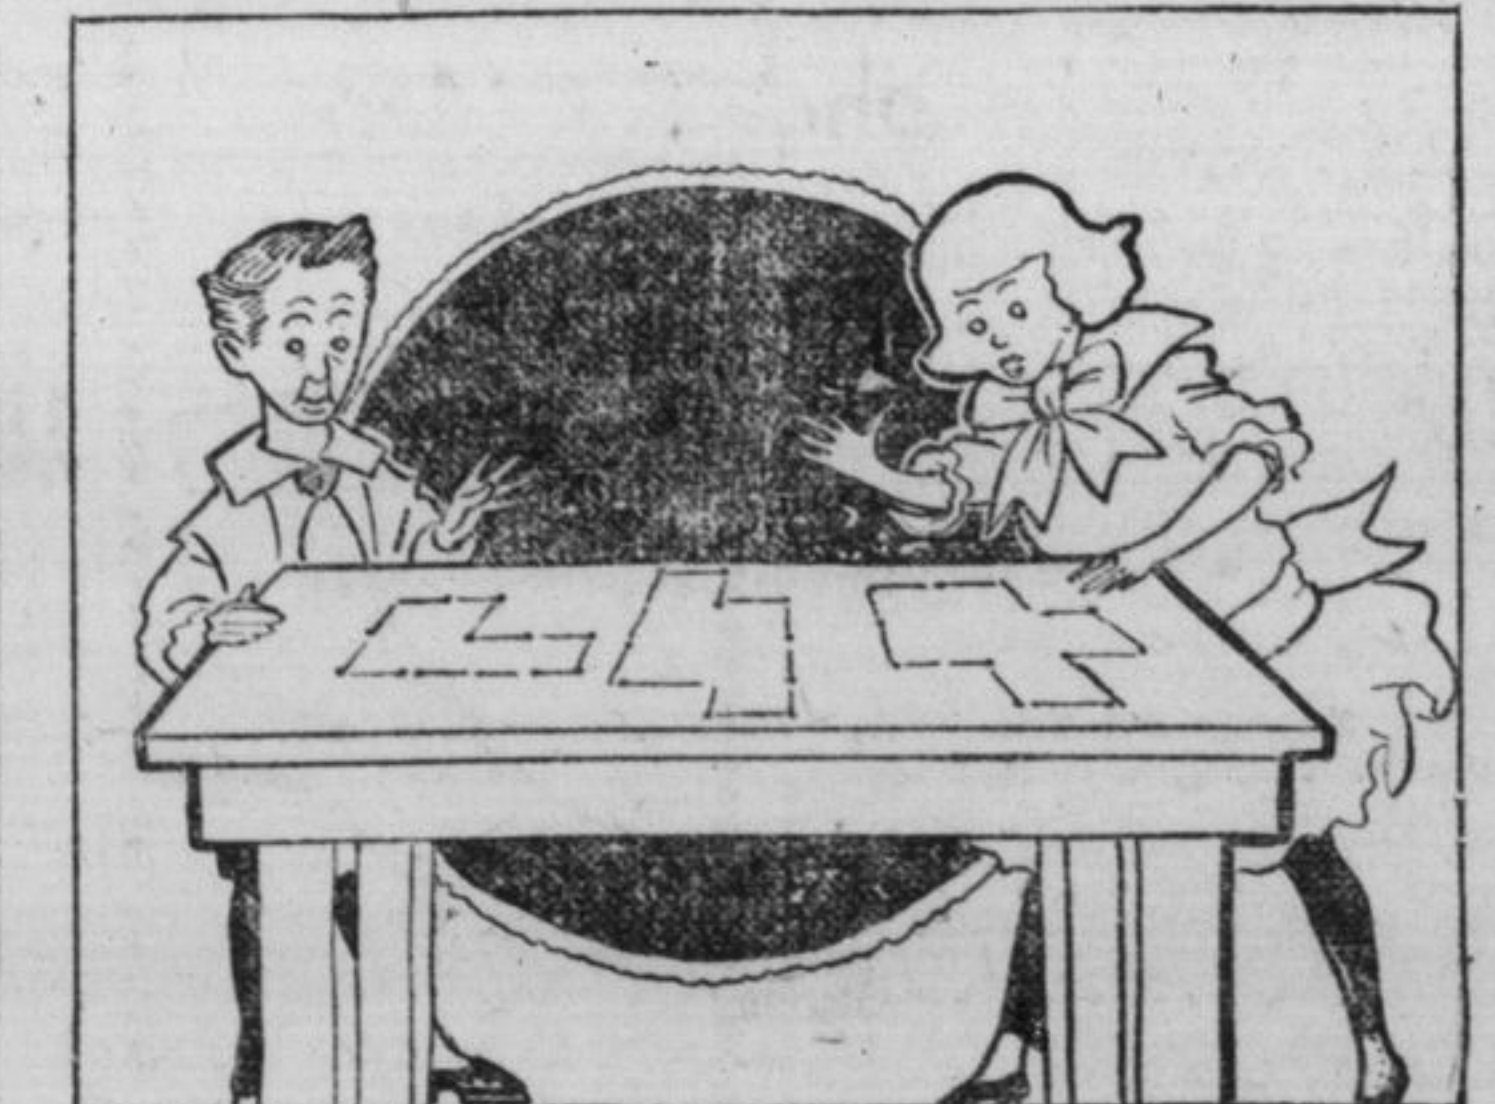

A letter was received from Dr. Mundell stating that a case attended by him and set down as chicken-pox, was not a disease reportable to the board of health. The board thought this reply unsatisfactory, as chicken-pox must be reported. Mayor Ross said that he had seen Dr. Mundell and the case in question was not chicken-pox. The matter was then dropped.

Of late during the small-pox outbreak, accounts signed by two members have been paid by the city treasurer. Hereafter the accounts will first be referred to the city auditor. The law as to the above mode of payment is only intended for emergencies.
