

PLAYING HAVOC WITH PATENT MEDICINES

An Old-fashioned, Home-Made Mixture which Cures Kidney and Liver Troubles.

A prominent local druggist states that since the celebrated prescription of a distinguished specialist has become more or less known it is interfering with the sale of secret medicines, especially the patent or advertised kidney pills.

Fluid Extract Cascara..... 1/2 oz. Carriana Compound..... 1 oz. Syrup Sarsaparilla..... 6 oz.

Directions: One teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

Any good druggist can dispense this, or, even better, a person can buy the items separately and mix them at home by shaking them well together in a bottle.

A merchant well known in public affairs states that this recipe cured his rheumatism. Save the prescription.

NEW YORK JOTTINGS

AMERICA'S RICHEST AND BIGGEST CITY HARD UP.

Andrew Carnegie's Latest—Gambling Houses As Carefully Protected As the Greatest Banks—Booker Washington's Pithy Joke.

Every wide-awake man in this biggest and richest of all American cities will be compelled to hear a great lot of talk in the next few months about how poor his city is, and whether the results to him will be pleasing or miserable will depend on the temper and temperament of the hearer.

Almost every one but the very big tax-payers, who are not numerous enough to carry a ward on election day if they all chanced to live in it, is demanding necessary improvements, among which are a twenty million dollar city hall, for the old one would not be too large for a city of a hundred thousand inhabitants.

A talk of cutting down running expenses of the city government for the sake of desired improvements would provoke a howling chorus from the fifty thousand or more men on the city's pay-roll and also from the heads of departments, almost all of whom need more men, more materials and more money with which to pay for them, for the city is growing steadily, and cannot stop growing if it would, for the greater part of everybody and everything that comes into the United States insists on landing at New York and the greater part that must go out of the country has the same sort of preference.

Andrew Carnegie, who by common consent is our richest resident, William Waldorf Astor having become a naturalized Britisher, has been doing the most nifty thing of his very nifty life, for he said recently that of the forty-three partners he had had in the iron and steel business, forty-one became millionaires. He is credited with a determination to remain out of active business for the remainder of his life, and he has a will of his own, as everybody who ever attempted to cross it can testify, but he might be startled to know how many shrewd men have been resolving on the strength of that forty-one millionaire story, to beguile him into business again, no matter what kind of business, so that they may become his partners. Some of them are men, as old as he, who used to sneer at his estimates of the amount of money that might be made out of iron and steel, and the maddening fact, to them, is that at the time they had money to invest and Andy needed it to extend his manufacturing facilities.

Carnegie told a blunt truth in a recent address when he intimated that the principal business of a college president of the present day is to beg money for his institution. He might have added, with entire truth, that most of these honest beggars come to New York and get more or less of what they come for. One of the most frequent visitors of this kind, and also one of the most popular, is a colored man, Booker T. Washington, of Tuskegee. To the modesty and tact which have won him the respect of many New Yorkers with dollars to spare he has added in the past two or three years quite a popular kind of humor—the kind of joking that has a point which any man can supply to himself or his friends. His latest, told in New York, related to the days when he was very fond of fighting, and a great winner at it, too, though no one but himself seemed to notice that he was careful not to hit another chap unless he was dead sure he could down him. "But," he continued, "in the course of time it occurred to me that the only way I could keep a fellow down in the mud after I had put him there was to stay down in the mud myself and hold him there. To a man who likes to get into the mud and stay there, that sort of thing may be all right, but—well, I found it paid better in the long run to try to persuade a man into my way of thinking than to thrash him into it and know he'd change his mind as soon as I let go my hold."

As not one man in a hundred, this side of the Pacific States, handles half a dozen gold coins in the course of a year, it may be well for the public to know that if offered, as money, a bit of yellow metal a little smaller than a silver quarter and looking like a brass tag punched into shape by a village blacksmith in a hurry it will not be proper to collar the man who offers it and turn him over to the authorities as a shover of counterfeit currency. For the new five-dollar gold piece is the oddest looking thing in the shape of a coin that one is likely to have seen anywhere except, perhaps, in museums or other places where the coinage of ancient nations is exhibited. On one side is the head of an Indian with as ugly a face as could be found in any "Wild West" show, and on the other is a representation of the proud bird of our country—not the eagle with extended wings with whom our silver coinage has made everybody acquainted, but a sober, almost dejected fowl, with his wings hugging his sides and legs and his entire aspect suggesting that he is

CHURCH AND STATE.

Former Must Adapt Itself to New Conditions.

London, Jan. 5.—The Archbishop of Canterbury's New Year's message to the clergy and laity of his diocese says that since the state has taken over the duty of relieving the very poor, the church must yield place, "but similarly, though in a less degree, the state has accepted and discharged, be it well or ill, the obvious task of giving elementary education in things secular to little children, which was, in the old days, left, so far as the state was concerned, to the benevolence of the Christian church, but here because education in an old Christian land like ours involves of sheer necessity the duty of bringing to the knowledge of children the message of their heavenly Father's love, the Christian churches as such cannot possibly step aside. A special obligation rests upon the historic Church of England to readjust itself to the new conditions, and without diminishing by the weight of a single ounce the trust involved in the injunction, 'feed my lambs,' to make the right discharge of that trust correspond with the conditions not of a generation ago but of to-day."

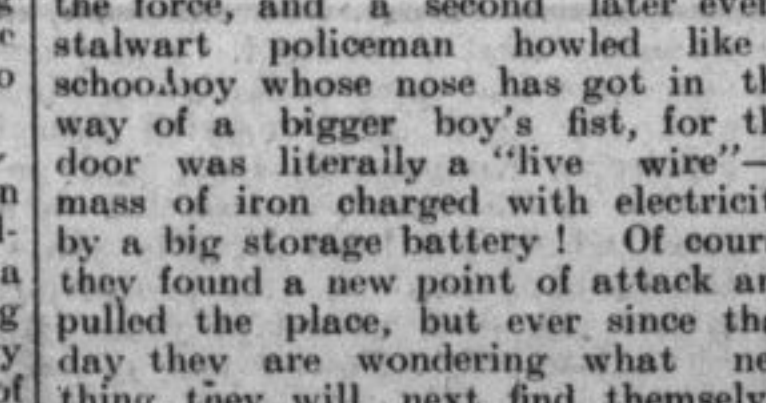

A Real Heroine. The following clipping from a western paper presents Miss Eva Shorey, daughter of J. J. Shorey, one of Newburgh's former citizens, in the light of a real heroine and needs no further comment. Miss Eva's many friends here congratulate her on her fortunate escape from such a great peril and on her exceedingly plucky conduct in saving her pupils in similar danger: "A triple drowning was very narrowly averted near Central St. Andrew's school on the afternoon of Wednesday last. The teacher, Miss Eva Shorey, of Winnipeg, had dismissed the junior pupils for the day. When on the way home one little boy, aged twelve, ventured out on the ice, which no one yet had dared to cross. He had gone some distance from shore when the ice gave way. Miss Shorey, seized a broom, the only available object, and hurried to the helpless boy. Seeing that the broom was of little assistance she reached out, caught him, and had almost succeeded in rescuing him from his perilous position when the ice broke, and both went down. As the water is several feet deep, owing to the dam at the locks, neither was able to gain a footing. There was nothing to do but cling to the breaking ice until help should arrive."

Fight Disease. Don't catch cold, don't catch an influenza. You can't if your blood is right. Life and the vital elements that fight disease and weakness are in the blood. Strength and effective resisting power can be had by use of Wade's Iron Tonic Pills (Laxative).

A Long Way To Pictou. There is room for a trolley line up the Bay of Quinte shore, from Deseronto, that passengers from the east, desiring to get to Pictou, may reach that point without expending hours of valuable time. It is surely time for a change when Kingstonians, travelling to the little town, must leave this city in the morning hours, or else be left over night in Deseronto or Trenton. The C. O.R. would be the better of a little opposition. It is surely not too much to expect that an evening train might be run in to Pictou from Trenton on New Year's eve.

A THREE HORSE EVENER.

The following description, with the accompanying illustration, will explain how to make three horse hitchers that have several advantages over others. The material for them is usually found at hand, and about all the labor necessary is making the eveners. The base or working bar, A, is forty inches long; the eveners, BB, are twenty-eight inches long. The proper sized holes are bored two inches from the ends in both the eveners and the base bar, and out near the edges as shown. Bore the centre hole in the eveners eight inches from the outer end and the centre hole in the base bar in the centre and on the front edge. The notch is now ready to be put together. Use two clevises and an open ring for the centre singletree, and one for each of the others. The iron straps, CC, are usually found on all farms, but if not at hand use four clevises, connecting them with a ring at DD, and the hitch is ready for business.
