TRINITY CORPORATION OWNS OVER $14,097,330.

Maintains Ten Churches and Sixteen Schools and Loans Money Without Interest.

New York, Jan. 6.—Trinity Corporation for the first time has issued a financial statement in detail. Its assets total $14,097,330, which includes productive real estate valued at $12,946,300.

The corporation maintains ten churches and sixteen schools. Its total income for the year was approximately $750,000, over $750,000 of which was derived from the corporations real estate holdings and only about $218,000 from pew rents. The expenditures for the year amounted to over $791,000, leaving an actual deficit of $1,916 for the twelve months. Trinity has a debt of $500,000 incurred in the erection of modern business buildings and apartment houses.

The collections and contributions for the year amounted to about $94,500, and following a surplus that began after the foundation of the church in 1697, all of this amount was given for charitable and missionary objects, in addition to the sums directly appropriated for these purposes.

The corporation's outstanding loans to churches outside of its own amounted to $370,946, and it collects no interest on the loans Trinity in effect makes an annual contribution to the work of these churches in amount of the interest which it refrains from collecting.

Trinity's income of $750,000 is expended mainly through the three channels of its religious activities, its schools and the requirements of its property. The expenditures for its ten churches and chapels amounted to $277,114 and for its schools $63,756. Its estate expenditures amounted to $44,180, the largest being being taxes. Repairs was the item of next importance, the figures for repairs, alterations and supplies to buildings other than churches and schools being $103,973.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Kingston Urged To Arouse.
St. Catharines, Dec. 14.—The Dominion government says that it has decided that Old Niagara shall be the permanent abiding place of the annual militia camp, and seems to have set about to improve and preserve in every way possible the historic property. Following the acquisition of more land for the camp, and the construction of new rifle ranges, comes the report that the historic old fort, Missisquoi, is to be repaired and put into better shape.

The militia department, it is understood, will take immediate steps to prevent the further ruin of the old fort. The plans are not yet completed, but they will include two circular breakwaters to protect the ramparts from the action of the waves of Lake Ontario. These breakwaters will be about twelve feet wide and will extend diagonally out into the lake for about 150 feet, one running southerly from the east bastion of the fort and the other northerly from the north bastion. The idea of forming the breakwaters with the fort in the apex is so to allow the action of the waves to pile up in the enclosure a wide, sandy beach.

The ramparts will also be repaired, and the cannon which used to look out from the eastern bastion is likely to be replaced. New doors will be put up, and the approaches to the fort improved.

Port George will also be repaired. This news will be received with great satisfaction by thousands of Canadians who have been grieved to witness the havoc which storms of recent years have done on the embankments of this one of Canada's most historic forts.

Kingston, Jan. 4.—(To the Editor): Wake up, Kingston, wake up! You have been asleep too long. Wash up and get busy. Get out after the goods possible, whether they come or not. Abandon the idea of voting $100,000 for nothing. When an hotel will pay capital will not go begging to put in the proper staff of hotel.

What Kingston wants first and foremost is (mark my words) the G.T.R. to build through the town. Kingston is too colonial. It is not on the main line. Get it in. Never mind what it costs, then get out after your industries. Do you know that although Canadians are not ignorant as a class, there are school teachers in Canada who don't know where Kingston is, although they have been over the G.T.R. from Montreal to Toronto. Funny, isn't it. Take my word for it. Get Kingston on the main line and your city will take fire and go ahead of Peterboro and all the other second-class cities in Ontario. Why not use something like the enclosed. Don't let St. Kits have it all their own way.—CITIZEN.

To Repair Fort Henry.

Cannons to be Re-mounted—Rifle Ranges Established—Canada's Historic Battleground to be Preserved for the Nation.

Special to the Whig.
Kingston, Ont., Jan. 2.—The Dominion government says it has decided that old Fort Henry shall be a permanent abiding place for troops and shall be preserved for all future generations as a mark of antiquity and history of Canada's early times, and seems to have set about to improve and preserve in every way possible the historic property. Following the construction of new rifle ranges comes the report that the historic old fort will be drained, its walls restored, cannons re-waggoned and the place once more the brilliant sight of yore when garrisoned by the regulars of the queen's colors—now to be the colors of the queen's son—Edward VII.

The militia department, it is understood, will take immediate steps to prevent the further ruin of the old fort. The plans are not yet complete, but they will include proper drainage, repair to its ancient walls, garrisoning the fort by a company of regulars.

ART OF LYING IN BED.

The Bed is the Outcome of Gradual Development.
By some millions of oriental people the western custom of sleeping on a bedstead is regarded as an acrobatic performance, grotesque and dangerous. An Arab who had never before seen the inside of a house was brought a few months ago, with a broken leg, to an American mission hospital in Syria. When the nurses tried to put him to bed he struggled frantically. He wanted to go to sleep, but he put him on that high bank he would have to keep awake all night, holding on to the side lest he should roll off.

Like all really great inventions, the bed was the outcome of gradual development. The credit for inventing the pillow belongs to Jacob, the son of Isaac. Anyhow, Jacob's pillow, if not the first, was the most famous in history, for it gave him a dream which has been a subject for the humor of Mark Twain, and it founded a tradition revived at the coronation of every British monarch.

If the famous Stone of Destiny in Westminster Abbey was really Jacob's pillow, one wonders not that Jacob dreamed, but that he dreamed of heaven. No English sovereign sits up on the stone at his coronation without the interposition of an oaken beam and ample cushions, and regarded as a pillow too obvious for improvement too obvious to the brain of an Edison for their development.

The sequel to the stone pillow was the invention of the stone bed, and the substitution of softer materials came long afterwards. Then, perhaps, if ages later, arrived the innovator who raised the bed from the ground. Perhaps he was a sensitive and nervous man, with an abnormal repugnance to the lower forms of life, who disliked the company of snakes and things as bedfellows, perhaps he was the husband of an exacting wife, who wanted a bed that she could "sweep under" or a safe harbor for her military boxes. Anyhow, he dared and did: One can imagine the ridicule, not un-mixed with awe, of the neighbors who assembled night and morning to see him get into and out of this revolutionary contrivance. Doubtless, he suffered many bruises, perhaps some broken bones, before he acquired the art of tumbling out, but having acquired it, the laugh would be on his side, and his neighbors would be eager to learn the secret.

We marvel at the habit of the stork in sleeping balanced on one leg, and of the bat in sleeping suspended head downwards by a claw, but we regard as a matter of course our own custom of sleeping on a raised platform little wider than our bodies. To most of us, indeed, the accomplishment has become so natural by long practice that it is much easier to lie in bed than to get out of it.

Study the past if you would divine the future.

A BIG DIFFERENCE

Lord Rosebery on Municipal Government.

"I know there used to be a cheap sneer at municipal matters by a certain 'parochial.' I suppose I have what one of your more eminent burghesses, Lord Beaconsfield, used to call a 'parochial mind.' But my belief is that every day that passes over the great municipalities of this country are growing in power, in influence and in majesty. Their offices are daily more coveted, their honors daily more cherished, and their work expands every hour in usefulness and benefit to the country at large.

If the famous Stone of Destiny in Westminster Abbey was really Jacob's pillow, one wonders not that Jacob dreamed, but that he dreamed of heaven. No English sovereign sits up on the stone at his coronation without the interposition of an oaken beam and ample cushions, and regarded as a pillow too obvious for improvement too obvious to the brain of an Edison for their development.
