The republican revolters were called "insurgents," and they had the support pretty solidly of the democratic party, which owes Mr. Cannon nothing for his civilities. So, when the house met, there was a war. Mr. Cannon was reelected by thirteen, and regarded the close shave as an intimation of further trouble." The Reed rules were repudiated by a large majority.

The democratic scheme of a commit ee to strike the committees-which would he the last affront to the peaker-did not carry, but rules were amended in several particulars, and Mr. Cannon becomes what he should have been all along, the ser vant of the house and not its master. The practice is a good one of continuing in the speakership the man who rules ably and impartially, but there is nothing good in the re-election of a man who presumes to be the boss of the legislature and arrogates Toronto were not at the Borden meet-Oak and Quartered Oak.
