CURIOUS CUSTOMS.

Which Are Observed By the Veddas, Wild People of Ceylon.

Chicago News.

Of the curious customs observed by the Veddas, or wild people of Ceylon, a traveller writes: "All the men came to meet us and led the way to the caves, which were completely hidden by a thicket. On the rocky platform in front of the cave the men all surrounded us, shouting to their women to come and see their 'white-sister-in-law' or 'cousin.' Veddias have always been renowned for their truthfulness, and this reputation we are able to endorse. Each community has its own hunting ground, and adheres strictly to its own game rights. Upon each hunting ground there are a number of caves and rock shelters, and the families of the community move from one to another throughout the year, as the presence of the game, honey, yams or fish demands. The big caves are communal property, the smaller caves usually belong to single families, but even in the communal caves each family has its particular place, in which its members sleep, cook, eat and keep all their belongings.

"Each family respects the privacy of its neighbors' few feet of the cave floor as faithfully as if partition walls existed; only the children roam all over the cave at will. Food, however, seemed to be public property, for one woman would cook food and share it with everyone present in the cave. This may probably be explained as follows: The communal caves are situated in common hunting ground, therefore all the game, yams, iguanas or honey brought in from the common land is the property of the community, not of the man who procures it.

"I have stated that the smaller caves are usually private property. It would probably be more correct to say that Veddias possess private hunting grounds on which very frequently there are small caves, such caves being then the property of the owner of the land. When a man is living in his own cave in the midst of his own hunting ground, the produce of the chase would naturally be his own, though shared with anyone living with him. Women and children always fared as well as the men, and the former would be fed first in any time of scarcity. Indeed, the dainties were often saved for the children.

And lots of men make fools of themselves by doing the fool things they are invited to do.

A woman is never willing to admit that her shoes are too small or her feet too big.

How it tickles a man's vanity when he is asked to settle a disputed point. Patience is the right bower of success.

"ROSE OF HELL."

Said to Be the Rarest Flower Known to Science.

Through the gift of a friend who visited the remote region where it grows, Herman Silver of Los Angeles, has come into the possession of a specimen of the strangest and rarest flower known to science.

It is the "Rose of Hell," a gigantic blossom of solid wood, which grows only on the edges of a Central American volcano, and gets its name from the Indians, who believe the crater is the entrance of hell and the blossom is a native of the regions inside.

Mr. Silver's specimen is one of the few that have ever been brought to this country, and perhaps the finest. At first appearance it seems to be a tough, gnarled knot of a tree which has been splintered; but closer examination discloses the fact that it has petals of wood and bark and the rough outlines of a flower. The petals, concave in form, are arranged much like the petals of a half-blown rose. Their inside surfaces are covered with fine lines, which have the delicacy of fine hand carving. The stem, which is about a foot long, is of some unusual wood, which is light and strong. It is covered with heavy bark, which seems to have been cracked by heat. Both flower and stem are dark brown—the color of weather-beaten boughs, and dry as tinder. The flower grows on a tree of great size and strength. The blossom measures about twelve inches across.

The trees grow in crevasses on the sides of Mount Agua, a high peak among the rugged mountains of Central America and near the volcano of Fuego. The Guatemalan Indians have known of it for a long time, and have associated it with the fiery vengeance of the subterranean regions.

The Answer An Inspector Got From a School Teacher.

Toronto Saturday Night.

There are occasions when Inspector James L. Hughes discards his dignity and condescends to joke and chaff some of the lady members on the city staff of teachers. One of these occasions occurred a couple of weeks ago, the woman in the case being "an occasional." James L. wanted to be nice and agreeable, and during a lull in the business session started up a more or less personal conversation with this young lady. By and by he said:

"And where did you get your early education?"

"At Ottawa," was the reply.

"Ottawa, Ottawa," pondered the inspector, rubbing his head, and apparently trying to recall some distant memory, "where is Ottawa, anyway?"

"Where did you get your early education?" was the retort flashed back at him.

The advocate of fonetic spelling laughed heartily at the ready reply, which so pleased him that the occasional, it is said, has since been appointed to the regular teaching staff, and has been notified that her salary as assistant principal starts on May 1st, whether there is a vacancy then or not.

"He is anything but a good barber who cuts an acquaintance."
