REAL MONTE CRISTO

TRAGIC CAREER OF PICAUD COBBLER OF PARIS.

His Rise to Great Wealth—Thrown Into Jail By Secret Enemies—He Was Left a Fortune By a Fellow Prisoner.

The romantic creation of the brain of Alexandre Dumas, "The Count of Monte Cristo," had a counterpart in real life in France in the last century. This is the tragic story.

In 1807, when Napoleon was at the height of his power, Francois Picaud was a sturdy young journeyman cobbler of Paris, full of health and animal spirits and happy in the love of Marguerite Vigoureux, a young girl of his own station in life. On the eve of his marriage hidden enemies denounced him to the imperial government as a spy. He was cast into prison, where he remained, forgotten by the world, for seven years.

Among his fellow prisoners was a wealthy Milanese priest, who treated him like a son and bequeathed to him 7,000,000 francs on deposit in the Bank of Amsterdam. Furthermore, this ecclesiastic told Picaud the secret of a hiding place in Italy where there were concealed jewels to the value of 1,200,000 francs and specie amounting to three millions.

When the empire was overthrown in 1814 Picaud was one of a vast number of political prisoners throughout France who were given their freedom. He proceeded to gather the priest's treasure and to plan vengeance upon his enemies. Who they were he did not know.

Disguised as an Italian priest, he succeeded by bribing the least guilty of the conspirators and discovering the central story of his undoing. The leader in the plot he learned was one Loupain, who had married Marguerite Vigoureux, prospered and become the proprietor of one of the handsomest cafes in Paris.

Picaud went to the capital and under a suitable disguise obtained work as a waiter in Loupain's establishment. Fellow servants there were Guilhem Solari and Gervais Chaubard, who, with Loupain, had denounced Picaud in 1807.

The pretended waiter was not long in bringing his vengeance to a consummation. Chaubard was the first victim of his wrath. His body, pierced by a knife, was found on one of the bridges over the Seine. Loupain was disgraced, reduced to penury and finally stabbed to death in the Tuileries gardens. Solari was poisoned and died in frightful convulsions. But speedy retribution overtook the implacable avenger. One night Picaud was seized, bound and borne to an abandoned quarry. In the darkness a terrible voice said:

"Picaud, what name are you passing under now? Are you still the priest Baldini or the waiter Prosper? You wished for revenge. You have sold yourself to the owners of hell. Then years you have given to the pursuit of three wretches you should have spared. Me you dragged down to perdition. The diamond by which you bribed me to your destruction. I killed him who cheated me. I was arrested, condemned to the galleys and escaped only after years of torture. My one thought has been vengeance on the priest Baldini. You are in my power. Do you know me? I am Antoine Allut. How much will you pay for bread and water?"

"I have no money," groaned Picaud. "You have sixteen millions. These are my conditions: I will give you something to eat twice a day, but for each meal you must pay me 25,000 francs."

However, the cupidity of the prisoner proved stronger than his hunger. He underwent terrible suffering without any signs of yielding until his captor, goaded to fury at the prolonged obstinacy, threw himself upon Picaud and stabbed him to death.

Love without esteem is almost as capricious as esteem without love. Silence is indeed golden to those who are paid to keep quiet. Among other high rollers we have the elevated trains.

FOR WOMEN WHO ARE DISCOURAGED

Because of Lingering Weakness and Nervous Derangements There is New Hope and Cure. The Letter Quoted Voices the Experience of Thousands of Women Who Have Found Health and Joy in the Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

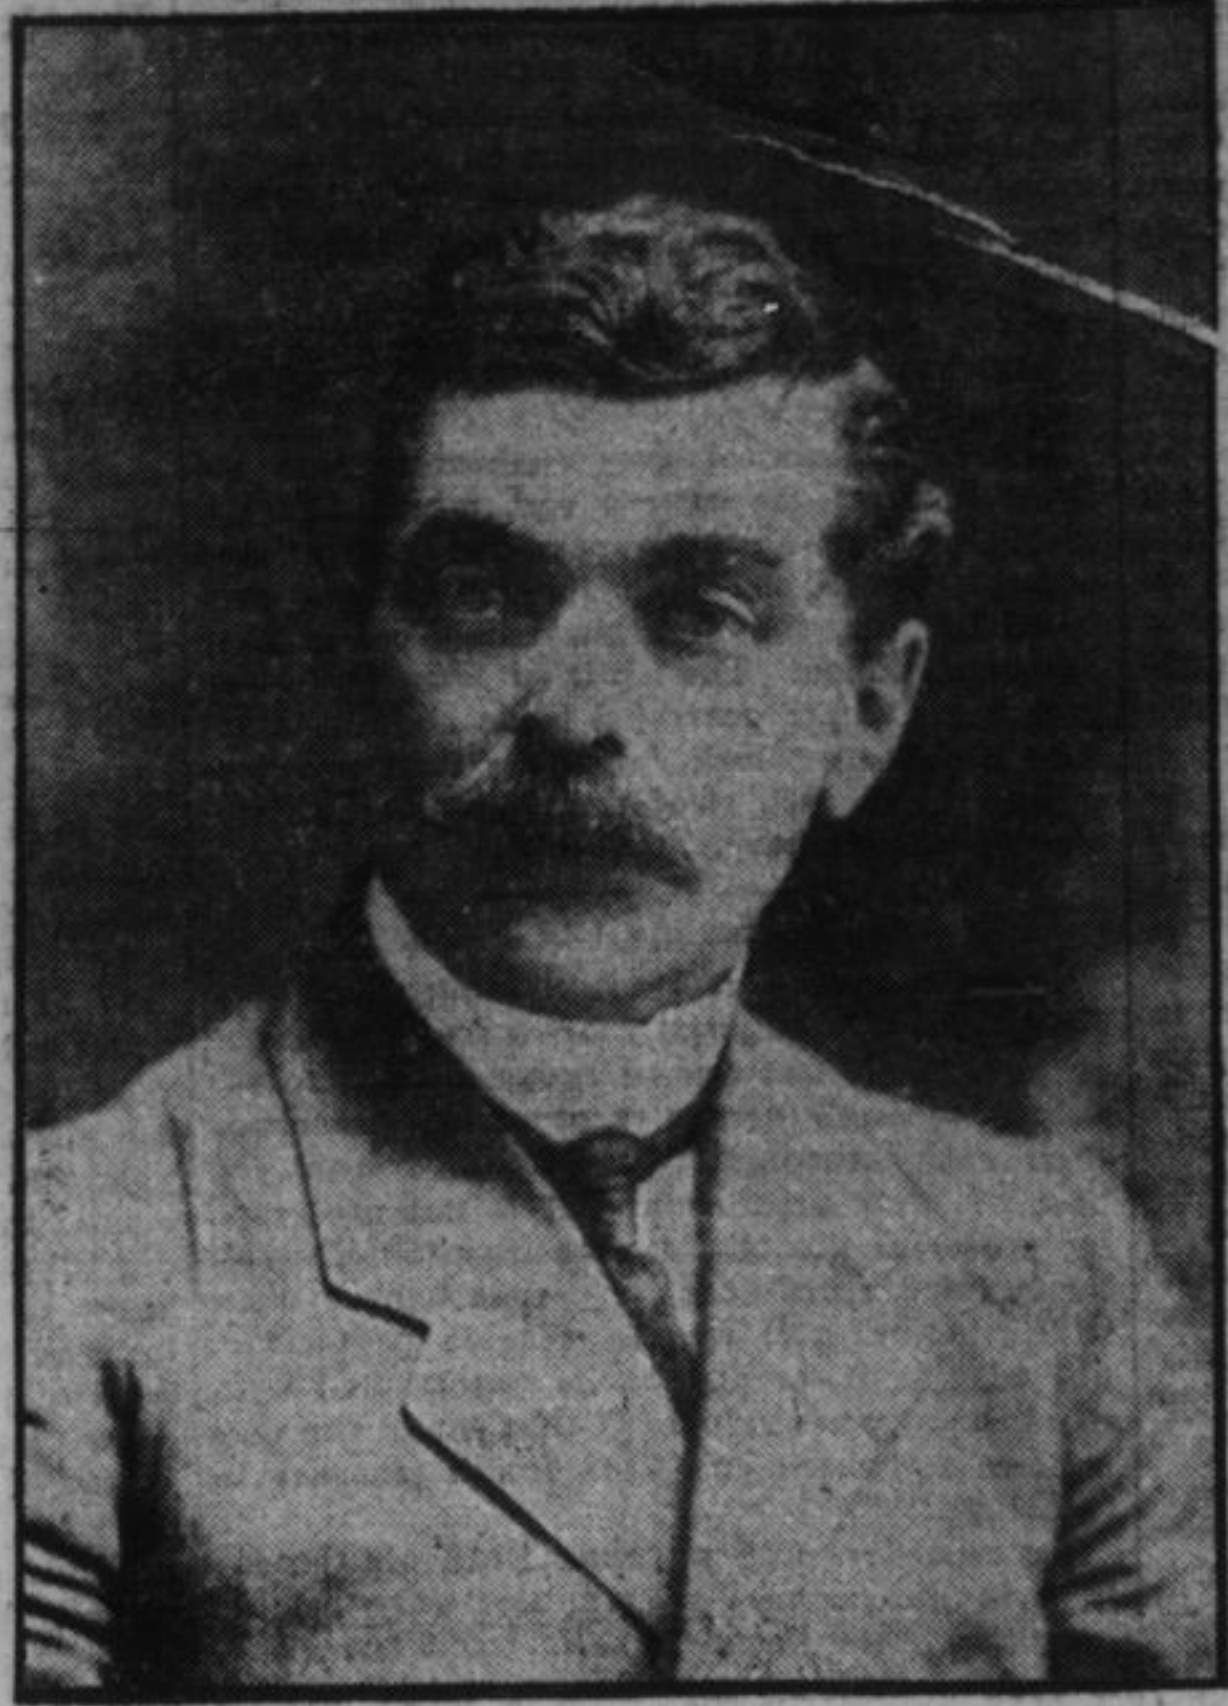

The Christian Scientists are undoubtedly right. To some extent, the mind does influence the body, both in health and disease, and if you give up hope, leave off treatment and fall into discouragement and despondency there is little reason to expect that good health will force itself upon you.

You must do your part if you are going to get strong and well. You must make up your mind and then select rational treatment. If your system is weak and run down, your blood thin and watery and your nervous system exhausted and your treatment such as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, which has never been equalled as a means of building up health, strength and vigor.

That Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is particularly successful in the cure of ailments and derangements from which women suffer most is attested by such letters as the following from Mrs. D. D. Burger, Heather Brae, Alta., which refers to her niece. She writes:

"Mrs. Armstrong had great weakness, heart trouble and indigestion. In fact she was run down in every way and had lost all hope of ever getting well again. She had been in poor health for over four years after the birth of her first child. The persistent use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has proven of marvellous benefit to her. She feels real well now, is looking fine and fleshing up so that one would hardly believe her the same person."

PIANO POINTERS.

How the Instrument Should Be Cleaned and Cared For.

Never forget to give the piano its due attention at all times under any circumstances, and it will last ten, twenty, thirty years and be rich in tone and power of expression to the very end, which may be postponed indefinitely if the piano is of good manufacture, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The principal enemies of the piano are dampness and extreme and sudden changes of temperature. On a wet or even cloudy day the windows of a room in which a piano is standing should never be opened under any circumstances or injury to the instrument will be apt to result; and it should be borne in mind that the higher the quality of an instrument of this character the more delicate is its mechanism.

A piano left exposed to a draft from an open window on a damp day for a temporary injury in the swelling of the wooden portions, which will cause the activity to lose responsiveness and the keys to become "sticky."

When dust settles on the strings or filters down in the crevice between the keys, the tone will be impaired in the first case, and, in the second, the action will be rendered hard, the keys will stick and two or more apt to respond to the touch at the same time. To avoid this, therefore, when the room is swept or dusted it will be well to throw a cloth over the piano, if it does not stand very close to the wall, and the fall board should be closed.

At night the piano should be kept tightly closed, but during the daytime it is highly advisable to have the key-board exposed to the light, even though the instrument may not be in use, in order to prevent the keys from turning yellow.

Pieces of bric-a-brac, sheet music or articles of any kind should be kept from the top of the piano, for they produce a jarring sound and have a tendency to injure the tone of the instrument.

If a piano is not used frequently a little camphor wrapped in soft tissue paper should be placed in a corner of the instrument inside the case to keep out moths, which will otherwise attack and eat away the wood, and felt used in the mechanism, thus seriously injuring the touch. In placing the camphor inside the case be careful that it is not too close to the strings.

In cleaning the piano a feather duster should never under any circumstances be used. A clean, soft cloth will do the work more efficiently and not raise that enemy of the instrument, dust.

Motor Funeral Corteges.

A Chicago undertaker has installed for service a black motor hearse for adults, and also a white motor hearse for children and three special cars for carrying mourners, says Popular Mechanics for June. The three mourners' cars will carry twenty-four persons.

Chicago's cemeteries are nearly all located more than ten miles from the central sections of the city, and to drive to them in carriages, especially when the weather is cold, is a long and wearisome journey. The motor funeral cortege has travelled over city pavements and muddy roads to a cemetery eleven miles distant in one hour, the return journey being made in forty-five minutes.

Indigestion The Answer.

New York Press. The show window was full of pies. A man came by, stopped, looked at the pies over, mumbled something to himself, then went on mumbering as he went.

"I don't know what makes them do that," said the cashier girl who was near the window. "I don't know whether they are counting the pies and don't like the number of them, or don't like the looks of them, or are afraid because they haven't enough money to buy them; but they do that way all day long. Come by the window, take a look at our pies, then go along mumbering."

Aping Oriental Ways.

M. A. P., London. A party of English tourists were travelling in Persia, and in Tabriz they invited a prince to dinner. He came, splendidly attired in gold and white. But he was taciturn. He seemed disappointed. When the dessert was served he sneezed and said, "I am piggish because they the Englishmen are now taking a leaf out of the Persians' book."

"How so, Prince Kamil?" said the host's wife—a very tall lean woman, with unusually long teeth. "They leave their pretty women at home," said the prince frankly.

ANECDOTE OF SWINBURNE.

Pompos Headmaster Caused Him to Lose Holiday.

Once when Algeon Charles Swinburne was travelling back with his father from school at the end of one of the terms, they entered a carriage in which the then headmaster of Eton, who was buried in the Times, was seated. "Isn't that Dr. —?" the admiral whispered to his son. "I believe it is," stammered young Swinburne reluctantly. After a rebuke at the apparently careless answer, the admiral "accused the awful presence" with, "Dr. — I believe, sir?" The doctor was plainly annoyed at being disturbed by a stranger. "Well, sir," pursued the admiral, "my boy here has just finished his first term at Eton, and I should very much like to know what account you can give of him."

As a matter of fact, the doctor had not set eyes on young Swinburne before. "I don't know, however," I suppose," Swinburne after a moment's reflection, which he had, no doubt, considered a slight on his dignity, he glanced down at me with a scarlet face, and said deliberately: "Your boy, sir—your boy is one of the very worst in the school, and then entrenched himself once more behind the Times." At Paddington there was a storm. In vain young Swinburne protested that the doctor had said what he had out of pure vexation, but the father declared that he would take the word of the headmaster, and Swinburne was deprived of all pleasures and privileges for the duration of the holiday.

The Unhonored Prophet.

A correspondent was talking about Wilbur and Orville Wright. "It is the usual case," he said, "of the prophet without honor in his own country. The Wrights had to go abroad to be appreciated."

"Don't think they didn't feel their country's indifference to them. They felt it deeply. On the head of it, Wilbur Wright told me something about Carlyle."

"A visitor to Carlyle's birthplace, back in the '70s, said to a native: "Smart man, that Thomas Carlyle!" "The native grunted. "Him smart? Why, I went to skule wi' him."

A Particular Customer.

"Ma wants two pounds of butter exactly like what you sent us last. If it ain't exactly like that she won't take it," said the small boy. "The grocer turned to his numerous customers and remarked blandly: "Some people in my business don't like particular customers, but I do. It's my delight to serve them what they want. I will attend to you in a moment, little boy."

"Be sure to get the same kind," said the boy. "A lot of pa's relations is visiting at our house and ma doesn't want 'em to come again."
