ranks of the septuagenarians almost at the same time that he celebrated the jubilee of his entrance into the army, had his first taste of warfare in the Ashanti Campaign of the 'seven ties, after eleven years of what l has so aptly termed "rusting routine. Sir William, who was a captain at the time, was mentioned on several occasions in the despatches of Lord Wolseley, and from that time onward, until the last Boer War, there was scarcely a campaign of importance that the British army was engaged in in which he did not play a prominent part. It was after the Ashanti Campaign and shortly before the Zelu War of '79 that Sir William married Miss Elizabeth Thompson, the wellknown painter of "The Roll Call" and other famous pictures. The story goes that Sir William-he was then, of course, Capt. Butler-was lying ill at Haslar Hospital, when his friends almost bored him beyond endurance with descriptions of the famous picture which was the talk of London. Sceptical regarding the picture's mer-its, which he thought had been exaggerated, he went to London, saw it, and was conquered. Shortly after he met Miss Thompson, and they were married a few weeks later.

Value of Special Knowledge. The remarkable botanical knowledge of Sir George Birdwood, one of the most erudite men in the Indian service, once enabled him to perform almost unconsciously a neat bit of detective work. He was in Bombay when he was asked to investigate the case of a young nobleman who, in applying to the governor for an appointment, represented that he was just out from England, and his letters of introduction had been lost on the voyage.
