LITTLE RED HEELS.

Boston Post.

"Oh, dear!" The cry echoed in a gasp of fright. John Morell turned sharply at the foot of the stairs, extending his arms automatically just in time to receive a fluff of white with a slender form in its midst. His sturdy figure recovered quickly from the shock of the impact, and he placed his burden on the carved settee nearby. As he did so he caught a glimpse of two little red heels on shoes of snowy kid. They were the Frenchest of the French. "Ridiculous things," he snapped, "I wonder you didn't break your neck." The limp little figure sat up with a jerk. "They're not ridiculous at all," it protested, pushing one of the offending objects out for further inspection with a dainty air of bravado. "I just slipped." "I never slip," replied John tersely. "You ought not of those absurd monstrosities on these—"

John Morell. Polly said, setting her little white teeth. It is hardly necessary to state that at the end of two weeks the learned young professor found himself very cognizant of these little red heels whenever they happened to be. He approved of them less than ever, but he could not ignore their owner, although he threatened twenty times a day to take himself out of this obsession by the next train. Only last night his frivolous self urged Polly to take a run out to "The Poplars" in the morning and had been delighted at her eager acceptance. "She really is a very bright young woman. If her frivolity is only directed in the proper channels she will be most charming," he said to himself convincingly. As Polly stepped into the raincoat on the following morning, clad in her sailor suit of white rain, the fluff of her hat dust coat brought those same red heels in evidence, but watching the curl of her rose-leaf lips John forgot to censure.

she felt something against her cheek, mischief shone in her eyes. Slyly reaching into his breast pocket, she pulled forth the little heel. "And how about this?" she queried. "Do you like it now," teasingly. "I love them. Blessed little red heels," John answered with due humiliation, and claimed the rose-leaf slip as his own.

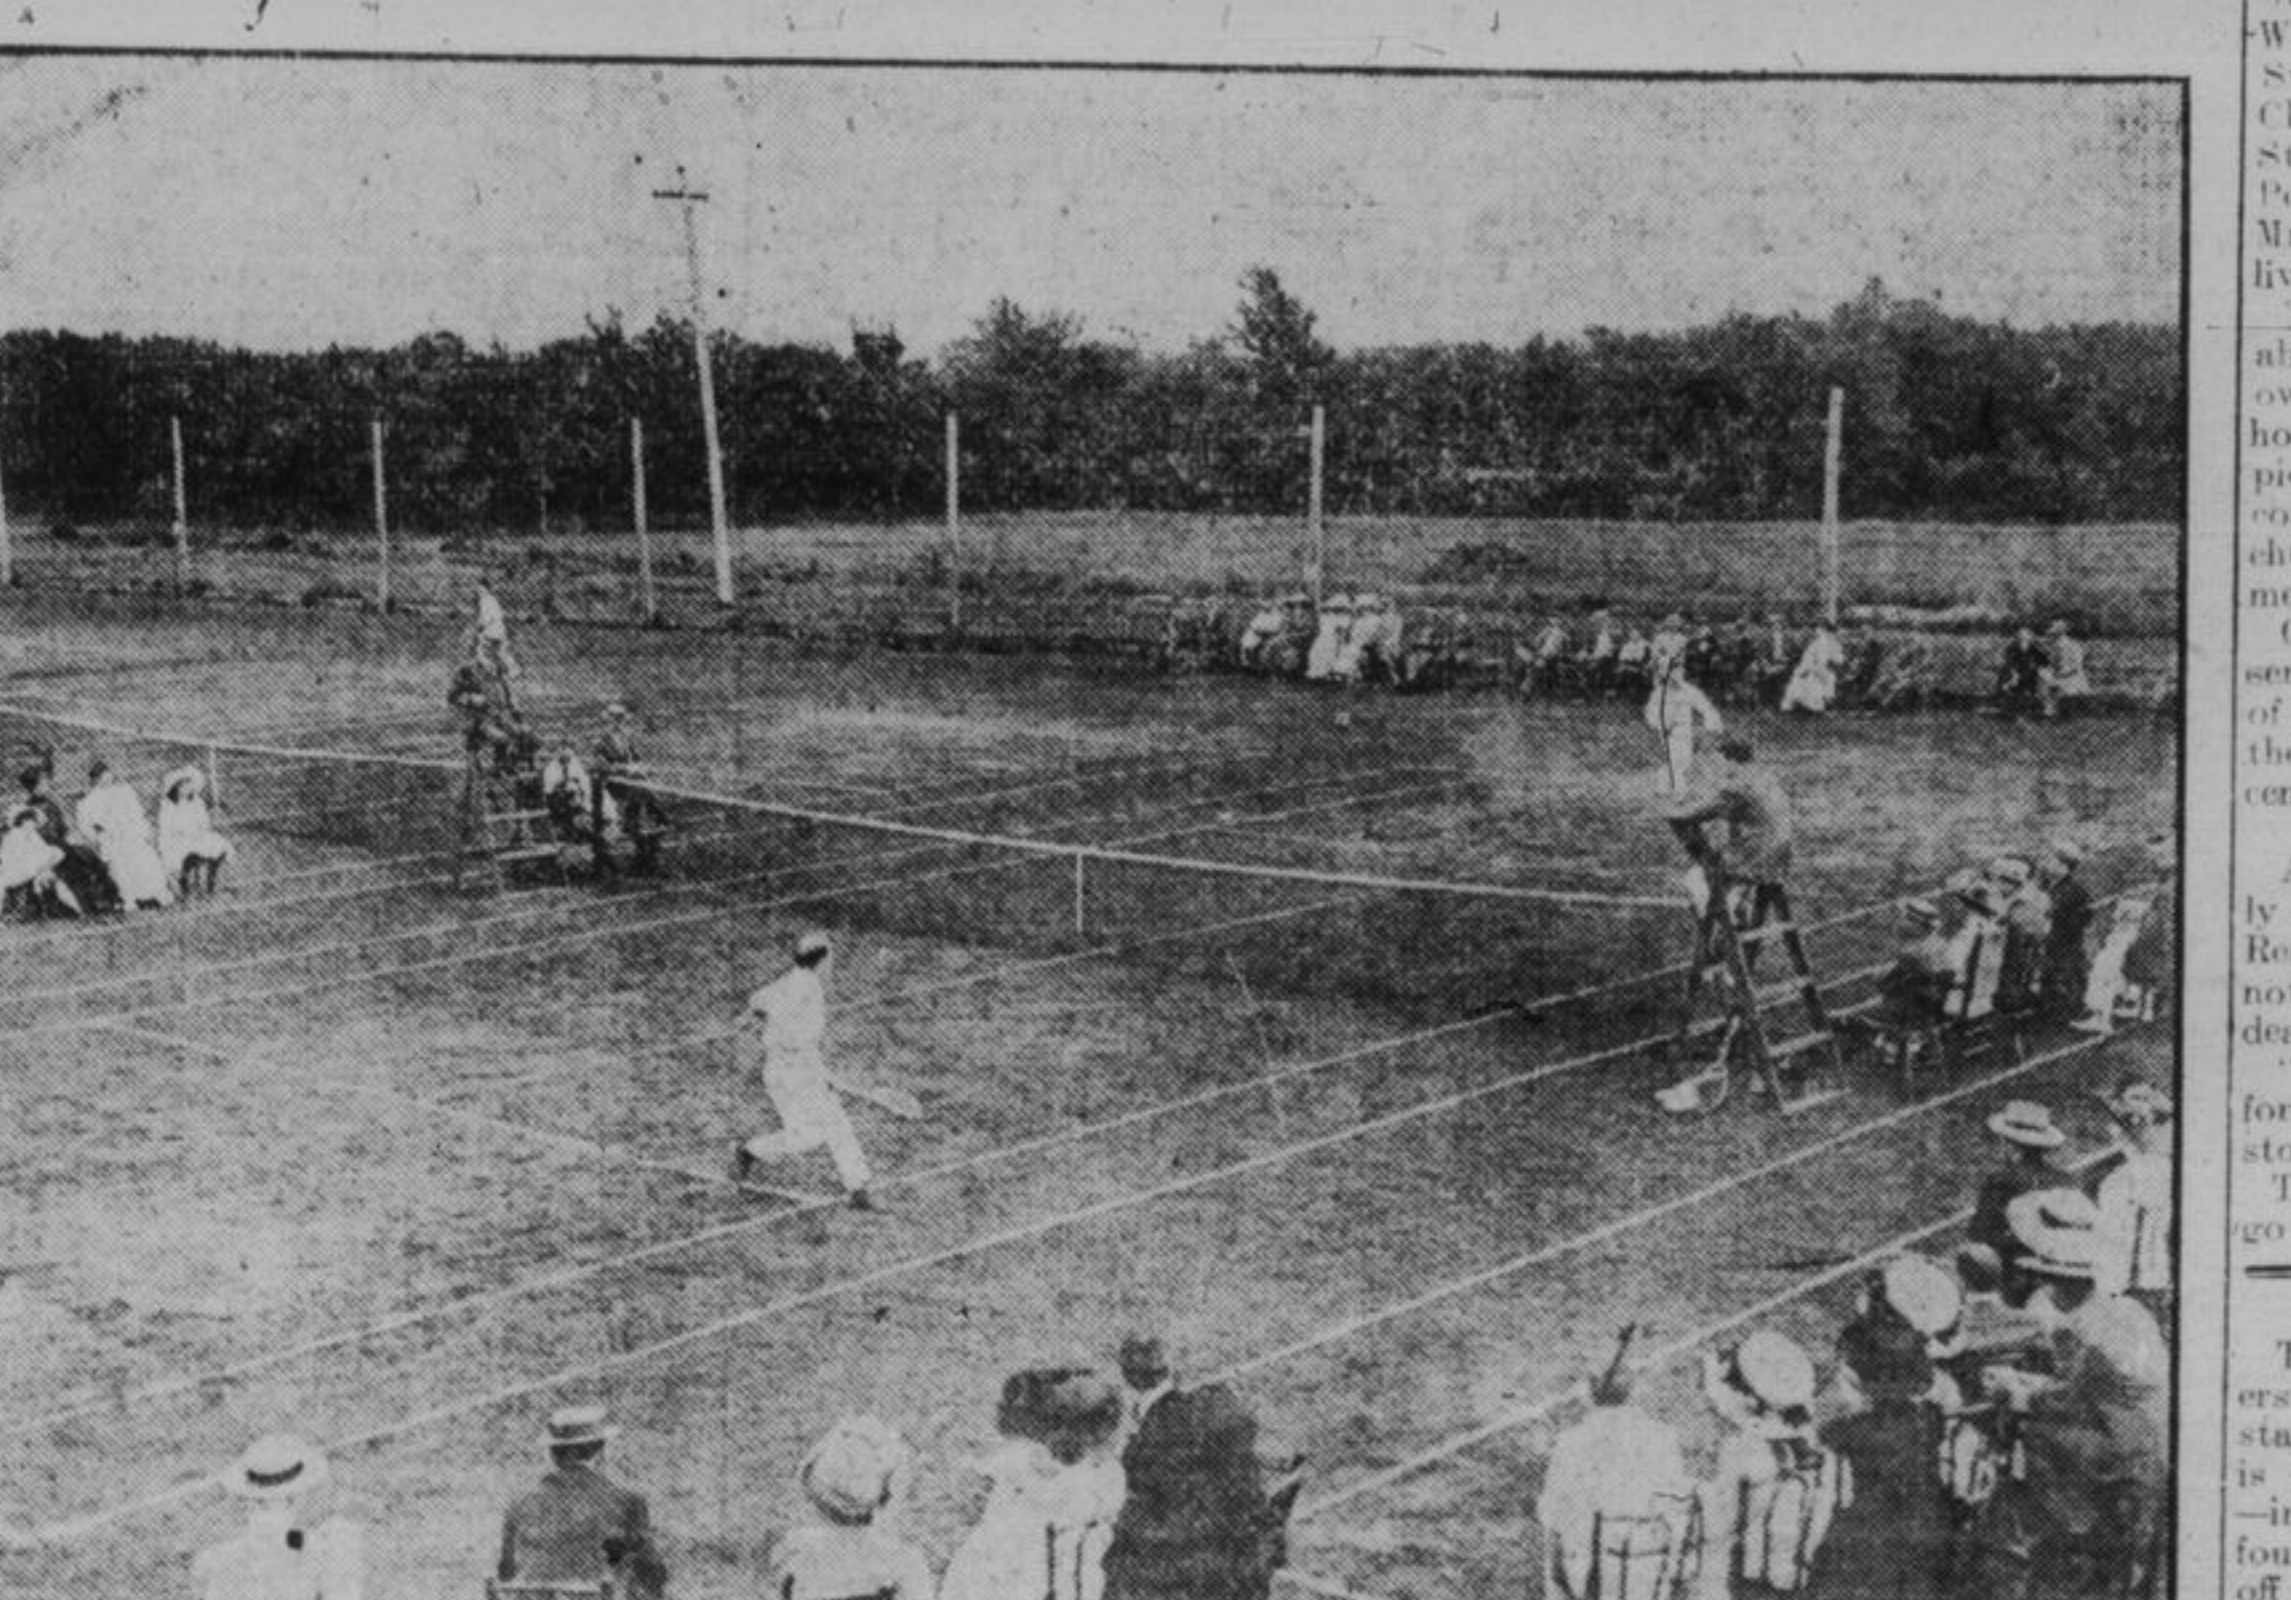

ANNUAL MEETING. St. Lawrence River Organization in Session. Alexandria Bay, N.Y., Aug. 5.—The twenty-sixth annual meeting of the Anglers Association of the St. Lawrence River, an organization which has done much to promote the interests of fishermen and to protect the fish in the St. Lawrence, was held at the Thousand Island House, on Wednesday, anglers and sportsmen from all parts of New York state and from several other states being present.

Officers were elected as follows: President, Hon. Charles E. Skinner, Watertown; vice-presidents, Alexander Robb, New York; Thomas B. Kerr, Alexandria Bay; Col. O. G. Staples, Washington, D.C.; secretary, W. H. Thompson, Alexandria Bay; treasurer, R. P. Grant, Clayton; executive committee, A. C. Cornwall, chairman, F. H. Taylor, R. P. Grant, G. T. Rafferty, George Boldt, O. G. Staples, C. A. Gillespie, F. W. Sackett, H. C. Davis, T. B. Kerr, Walter Fox, Dr. J. D. Cole, C. C. Lamson, C. E. Emery, W. H. Nichols.

Through the courtesy of the Hutchinson brothers the delegates were taken on a trip to the Thousand Island Yacht club, directly across the river, and were entertained there for some time. The meeting was held with almost perfect weather conditions ruling and consisted of a business session, a banquet, a tour of the islands, and a trip to the Thousand Island Yacht Club, as well as numerous impromptu gatherings of sportsmen at which tales of the red and reel were swapped to the hearts' content of all.

THE LATE MRS. D. L. CLARK. She Died at Her Home in Tweed. On July 28th, the spirit of one of the oldest members of this community took its flight, from the land of sunlight and shadow to the realms of endless day, in the person of Patience Pomeroy, relict of the late David L. Clark. Deceased was born at Newburgh, December 26th, 1827. She was the daughter of the late John Pomeroy. In December, 1847, she married David L. Clark. Unto them were born eight children, of whom six survive, John, Samuel, Luther and Peter, Mrs. W. W. Shryver, Belleville, and Mrs. Sweetman, of this village. Peter P. Clark is a prominent business man of St. Gl. One brother, Rev. J. C. Pomeroy, Kincaidville, and one sister, Mrs. Sturm, of this place, are also living.
