COOK'S OWN STORY
OF HIS STIRRING DASH TO THE POLE.
Explorer Sends Long Narrative to Paris Paper Describing at Length His Epoch-making Journey to the Farthest North.
Paris, Sept. 2.—A Paris newspaper prints, this morning, an extended account of Dr. Cook's dash to the Pole, as given by him to the Danish journal at Lerwick, Shetland Islands.
Dr. Cook says that through his journey of exploration, which resulted in the discovery of the Pole, he has discovered approximately 30,000 square miles of hitherto unknown land to the knowledge of men, and that a new land, with interesting flora and fauna inhabiting it, has come under his observation.
The yacht John R. Bradley reached Etah, on the western coast of Greenland, late in August, 1907. Through the courtesy of the owner, Mr. Bradley, Cook was supplied suitably and that, together with his own outfit of scientific instruments and provisions, made an amount sufficient to warrant an attempt at a swift dash northward.
At Annotak, twenty miles north of Etah, where the expedition's supplies were landed, there was an extensive Eskimo settlement of upwards of 250 natives, and these all seemed friendly and willing to assist the explorer in the work of landing supplies and setting up a permanent house made of stone and packing boxes. The Eskimo village was overrun with "huskies" of the finest breed and stamina—good pullers and just the kind of dog that Cook wished to use on his hurried dash northward.
Plans were laid to spend the major part of the long winter in the station at Annotak, and then in the early spring to lay a route over Grinnel Land, on the western side of Smith Sound, and northward along the western coast of Grinnel Land, out on to the Polar Sea. Soon after the long Arctic night settled down upon the explorer and his party of Eskimos at Annotak, scouting parties were sent out to the westward across the frozen Smith Sound to seek game trails and to bring in fresh meat. Their progress was greatly hindered by a succession of fierce storms, and the object of their expeditions was only half fulfilled.
On February 19th, 1898, the sun rose for the first time in months, and on that day, with augury of success, the expedition made its start northward. Eleven men and 103 dogs and eleven heavily laden sledges set out to cross the frozen Smith Sound. It was severely cold, and on the Ellesmere Sound westward to the Pacific slope the thermometer sometimes registered as low as eighty-three degrees below zero Fahrenheit.
Soon the progress of the march was facilitated by the finding of game trails through the deep snow. These expeditions followed as well as it could up through Nansen Sound to Land's End, the hundred and one musk ox, seven bears and over three hundred hares fell before the guns of the party, and added precious meat to their stores.
From a point in the southern side of Hiberg Island the expedition pushed out into the Polar Sea. Here six Eskimo and forty-eight of the dogs turned back, carrying supplies of eighty days, with which to establish relief stations for the backward journey.
The crossing of the belt of water just below the Pole began three days later. The trains were now reduced to the utmost minimum. Twenty-six dogs, including the two leaders, big powerful brutes, were packed for the final dash to the Pole, which was then 460 miles away.
The first few days' marching showed encouraging progress despite the severe cold and the steady nipping wind. The big stretch of water separating the land ice from the floating polar pack was crossed in two boats, which had been brought along by the expedition, with little delay.
Several days after the sight of known land had been lost, the skies, which had been so overcast as to prevent an actual determination of position, cleared a bit, and on March 30th there was seen on the western horizon a new land. This was in latitude 81.47, longitude 86.36.
Because of the necessity of pressing onward no detour was made to examine this coast. Here the expedition saw the last signs of solid earth—beyond there was nothing stable and nothing terrestrial whatever.
By this time Dr. Cook was moving over country in which all signs of human life were lacking. There was no footprint of bird or beast on the snow. There was absolute silence.
The surface of the ice pack offered surprisingly little resistance to traveling. Although the party was living off tallow, dried beef and hot tea, there was no great torture involved in the journeying. So cold was it that constant action was compelled. The positions of the expedition were recorded each day and careful observations made. By the first week in April the sun was so high that alternate sunburn and frost bites were felt during the course of twenty-four hours.

On April 8th it was discovered that only 100 miles had been covered in nine days' travel. The position on that day was latitude 86.36, longitude 94.2.
By this time Cook was about 200 miles from the Pole. The loads of supplies had been reduced. Part of the dogs had been fed to the others, but there were still enough for their work.
The indications of land remained with them as 57th and 58th parallels were passed. Observations on the 14th gave latitude 88 degrees, longitude 95 degrees 52 minutes. This brought the party to within 100 miles from the Pole.
On April 21st the first correct altitude of the sun gave us 89 degrees 59 minutes 46 seconds, and Cook knew he was almost at the journey's end. A length was reached the point for which he had been working. There a staff was set up and a flag hoisted, and the North Pole was found.
The temperature that first day, from midnight to midday, was 38 degrees and the barometer was 29.83. There was no land in sight, and no sign of life other than the people and the dogs who had forced themselves into the wild. The party felt the loneliness intensely, and on April 23rd turned back from the Pole.

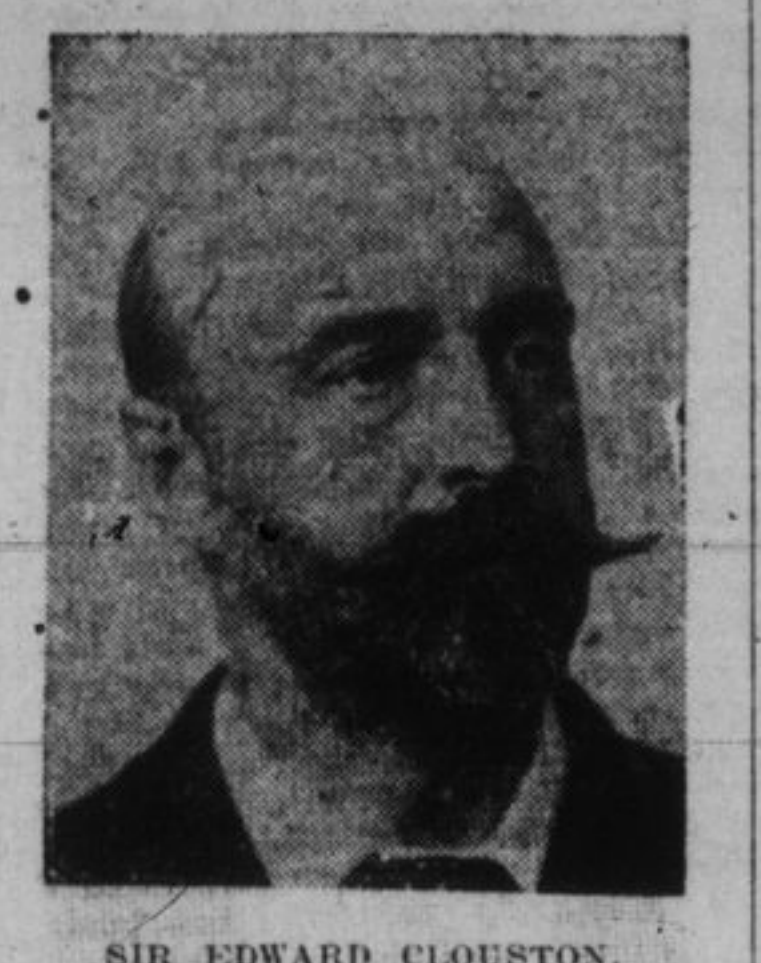

CHINAMEN IN COURT
FOR NON-PAYMENT OF THEIR LAUNDRY TAX.
Son Tang, Before the Court on Similar Charge Few Days Ago, Was Fined $5 and Costs for Month—Other Cases Were Adjudged For a Day.
Today was "Chinese Day" at Magistrate Farrell's court, several Celestials, keepers of laundry shops, being up on the carpet, charged with non-payment of their $50 laundry tax.
Son Tang, who was fined some time ago, for not paying his tax, was the first arraigned, and when asked by the magistrate why he did not pay up said: "Too much money; can't pay $50."
"Better pay the license or get out of business," remarked the court.
The magistrate pointed out that the case had been up in the police court a few days ago and at that time, counsel for the accused, had stated that he would instruct all the Chinamen to pay up.
City Solicitor McLarty said that he would have to press the charges, as the cases had been tried with too long. The licenses must be paid.
The magistrate thereupon imposed a fine of $5 and costs, or one month on Son Tang.
C. W. Livingstone, Jr., in the absence of A. B. Cunningham, who is out of the city, and asked that the case be adjourned until Saturday, when Mr. Cunningham would be home. The magistrate, however, said that the case had been adjourned several times, and he could not see his way clear to a further postponement. Some time had passed now, since the by-law calling for the increased tax had been passed by the city council. The accused had been fined $1 and costs, just a short time ago, and this had not yet been paid.
There is no reason why these cases should be treated with indulgence," remarked the magistrate. "They are no better than ordinary citizens."
Woo Kee was the next name called out by the court, but he was conspicuous by his absence.
"Him not here," broke in a spokesman for the "bunch."
And then the magistrate passed on with his list.
Wah Long was the next up, and Wah had a broad smile on his face, as he stood up. He explained as best he could, partly in Chinese, that he could not get the money to pay for his license.
Lee Foy nodded his head and said, "No money."
"Ching Chee also smiled. "Can't get money," he said.
"Where do you keep your bank account?" asked the magistrate.
"But it would be just as hard to get this piece of information from a Chinaman, as it would be to ascertain where a member of the 'Indians' list secured his liquor, and the magistrate gave it up, after telling Ching that if he could not pay for a license he had better get out of the laundry business.
Foo Sing also told a story about not having enough money, and then Hong Lee was given the floor. He made a short speech. He said that he had been away from the city for some time, and had only recently returned, and as he had started up in a new business he had had considerable expense. It would take him a little while to save up money to pay.
"The most reasonable excuse put in yet," said the court, as Hong spoke. Hong is the Celestial who gave money to Queen's University, and who also gave to the Japanese families fund.
"Have to wait till I get the money." Such was the plea of Sang Kee.
"Me, too," spoke up Jim Lee, and Dan Kee, who was last to make his bow, said he had an empty pocket-book.
The magistrate then stated that the cases would be enlarged until to-morrow morning, in order to give all a chance to pay up, and the Celestials filed out of court.
The court room was crowded with spectators, who appeared much amused at the proceedings. The Chinamen filed up the prisoners' dock, to overflowing. They were on hand some time before the court opened, and stood around the city hall, jabbering away about the case.

A SHOOTING CASE.
Found Dead in a Boat on a Lake.
There was a story circulated, this afternoon, that an unknown man had been found dead, from a gun wound, in a small boat at Mud Lake or Mud Creek. A passenger on the Kingston and Pembroke train brought in the news but nothing definite could be found out. It is understood that the man was duck shooting and in some manner shot himself, and bled to death before aid could reach him.

Details From Sydenham.
Special to Ont., Sept. 2.—Early yesterday morning Stanley Scales, a young farmer of this place, met a sad and sudden death while duck hunting. Procuring a boat from a neighbor he was in the act of stepping into the boat when the gun was accidentally discharged the charge penetrating the right lung. He was found shortly after partly in the boat and partly in the water.
Dr. Lockhart was called immediately and, after a careful inspection of the body, decided an inquest unnecessary. The body was removed to the home of deceased and interment will take place at Verona, his former home to-morrow.
Deceased was a very popular resident and sympathy is expressed on all sides.
He leaves a wife and one child.

SIR EDWARD CLOUSTON.
The genial president of the Bank of Montreal has no doubt whatever about the crop which he says is going to be a record-breaker. And he doesn't talk without knowing either for he took a trip through the west before he gave his opinion to the papers, which is more than some prophets do.

THE RACE IS OFF.
The Crescent Cannot Meet the Kathleen.
The officers of the Kingston Yacht Club have received word from the Watertown Club that it will be unable to race the Crescent against the Kathleen for the George cup on Labor day, at Cape Vincent. The Watertown Club asked for this race, and the Kingston Club acceded to its request. Some other event across the line has interfered with the Yankee club's plans.
The Kingston yachts will have a cruising race to a point near Gananoque, on Saturday afternoon. On Sunday they will proceed further down the river.

A Kingston Deserter.
George Clark, a deserter from the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery, was sentenced by Toronto police magistrate to thirty days in jail. Clark, who belonged to the Kingston battery of artillery, turned up at the camp at the exhibition, and stole a big brass horn from one of the bandsmen. He was captured shortly after leaving the camp with the horn carefully wrapped up in a blanket, also stolen.
Won By Wanderers.
An interesting baseball game was played at the cricket field on Wednesday afternoon, between a team from Battersea and the Wanderers. The local team won out easily, ten runs to three. A number of spectators watched the game from a safe distance. The first game was played in Battersea, some days ago, and the Wanderers were also victorious in it.

Want To Correspond.
The principal of one of the city schools has received letters from two ladies, attending a Beekwith school, at Tamworth, New South Wales, who are very anxious to correspond with pupils attending the schools in Kingston. The letters will be placed in able hands. Such correspondence as this will prove most beneficial to all concerned.
The Late Mrs. Mason.
Mrs. Catherine Mason, who died in the general hospital, on Wednesday, was the widow of the late William Mason, drawing lecturer in Queen's School of Mines fifteen years ago. She was fifty-six years of age. In religion deceased was a Presbyterian, attending St. Andrew's church. The funeral will be held on Friday.
Boat Houses Entered.
Four boat houses, in the vicinity of the cotton mill, were entered on Monday night, and some fishing tackle stolen. The locks on each of the houses were broken, and boys loitering around in that vicinity are suspected of the theft and will likely be prosecuted.
Will Cost $30,000.
The new wing to be erected in connection with the Hotel Dieu will cost $30,000. It will be five storeys high.
