DECLARED HIM DEAD
NOT HEARD FROM SINCE MARCH 15TH, 1902.
 An Order Issued By—Chancellor Boyd at Osgoode Hall—Bicknell Was Formerly a Storekeeper in Kingston.
 Special to the Whig, Toronto, Sept. 21.—Charles Bicknell, once a storekeeper, of Kingston, Ont., is dead. Chancellor Boyd made an order to that effect this morning. There was no death certificate, no proofs of actual death, but the news has not been heard of since March 15th, 1902, and his lordship decided that he was dead under the law.
 It seems that Bicknell left Kingston, in 1901, to go to the western states. His wife and four children were left to stay for three years in the limestone city.
 According to the affidavit of Mrs. Lenora L. Bicknell, his last letter sent her said he was going on a mining expedition. His lordship decided that the Canadian Order of Home Circles was quite justified in paying over the insurance of $1,000 to the wife.

MADE A RECORD.
 But the Steamer Held Up Off Fire Island.
 New York, N.Y., Sept. 21.—Capt. Hempel, of the Oscar II, of the Scandinavian-American line, that brings Frederick A. Cook, the Arctic explorer to America, made the record for his line during the trip, with daily runs sometimes as high as 400 miles. But, owing to the very ambition of the shape of the Oscar II to break records, Dr. Cook and his fellow passengers had to ride at anchor off Fire Island, from early yesterday afternoon until the morning, in order that a premature landing would not spoil the reception, planned by Dr. Cook's admirers.
 Talks with Dr. Cook, necessarily, were at long range, yesterday, either by wireless or from baffling distance, as no one, of course, was permitted to board the ship. Dr. Cook sent in two brief wireless messages in reply to questions, and he also sent a wireless to his wife. In one of the former messages he said the reason Whitney did not mention Cook's discovery, to Peary was that Whitney had given his promise not to mention it until he had returned to the United States.
 "Whitney will defend his discovery, if necessary," said the doctor, "but will tell the truth, which is all that is required."
