HOW A BRITISH FORCE WAS AMBUSHED.

The Soldiers Were Busy in Nigeria—Had to Hide in the Bush to Avoid the Enemy.

How a British missionary made a hazardous journey in face of an attack to a scene of an attack on a British force, who were ambushed, is told in the details now to hand of the attack on a British force in Nigeria. The first news came to Minna, a place about 30 miles from the scene of the occurrence, stating that a British force had been cut up at Gussoro by the difficult and truculent Guari people. This account, which was hurriedly written by the doctor, who was himself severely wounded, merely stated that the officer in charge was missing, together with a European police officer and a sergeant, and that the writer was himself wounded. The Rev. W. P. Low, who has for some years been engaged among the Guaris, happened to be at Minna when the news came in. He was hurrying down to the coast on his way home, having only reached Minna that day from his station at Kuta, and sent his despatch. Mr. Low in tenderly volunteered to go to Kuta to render any aid possible to the survivors, and also to use his influence with the people. This he did immediately.

Mr. Low spent 12 hours in Kuta, and, having assured himself of the loyalty of the townspeople, resumed his journey to the coast. Picking up a construction train on the way back, he just caught his steamer, but was nearly drowned in the native canoe when going down the Niger. He met the punitive force under Maj. Williams, consisting of 150 men, with a Maxim, on its way to the scene of the ambush. The ill-fated police party had started from Kuta only a few hours before it was attacked. It consisted of Lieut. Vanrenen, Capt. Stone, a doctor, a European sergeant, and 30 police. Accompanying the force was the Chief of Gussoro. Its object was to march to Gussoro, and there reinstate the chief, who, for his loyalty to the British, had been compelled to leave his town. For two months previously it was reported that the Guaris had been making poisonous arrows, and had declared that they would oppose the return of the chief. It was not thought that the people would attack, but as a measure of precaution, Maj. Williams' force had been held in readiness at Kuta, in case of trouble.

When the attack was made, however, the telegraph line was down. Lieut. Vanrenen had only proceeded for a few miles when he was completely overwhelmed by a force of 600 natives who surrounded the party in the thick bush. A deadly fire of poisoned arrows, at short range, was poured upon the British. Lieut. Vanrenen being at once killed, his body falling in the long grass, the doctor was also wounded by poisoned arrows, and his police were killed. Whatever formation was possible was attempted, but the heavy and well-directed fire completely disorganized the remainder of the police, who fled. Capt. Stone, who declared that they would try and recover his chief's body, but was unsuccessful, the remains being subsequently found by the punitive force and buried on the spot. The surviving Europeans managed to find their way to the coast, to avoid the enemy, who pursued them. The punitive expedition had some stiff fighting, but they inflicted severe punishment on the Guaris, and burnt their town. There were losses on the British side. The Gussoro chief was at first reported killed, but he succeeded in making good his escape.

The Western Way.

Henry W. Lucy, the famous English journalist, familiarly known as "Toby, M. P.," under which name he writes deliciously humorous Parliamentary comment for Punch, and who was recently rewarded with a Knighthood, tells some rich stories indeed in his recently published volume of reminiscences, "Sixty Years in the Wilderness." He never had any connection with politics, except as a commentator, but for forty years he has always had inside knowledge of everything transpiring or about to transpire in the House of Commons, and knows everybody worth knowing. He writes in delightful anecdotal style of all the famous men of his day.

Maitia's New Governor.

It is 32 years ago since Lieut.-General Sir Leslie Buxton, the new Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Malta, joined the Royal Artillery. Since then he has seen much active service, and proved himself every inch a soldier, one of his greatest admirers being Lord Kitchener. Sir Leslie is a great stickler for the smaller details of military, and if he is not one of those men whom people call by their Christian names, he enjoys a respectful popularity. There is no nonsense about him, they say in the army, "and although he sometimes rubs us the wrong way, we are well aware that no commander knows his business better."

What He Thought.

The old gentleman was not accustomed to having the new railway in his town. Upon seeing a train approaching he whipped up his horse and tried to cross the track in front of it. He and his horse came out safely, but the wagon was badly broken.

WONDERFUL ESCAPE

BRAVE RESCUE OF MINER BY FAITHFUL COMRADE.

Act of Heroism Spoken of and Commended Throughout All Australia. Melbourne, Sept. 25.—To the long list of heroic deeds associated with the miners of the Australian goldfields of Ballarat and Bendigo must be added another story of a man risking his life for his friend, the details of which have just been published.

On a recent Friday afternoon John Allen, a married miner, 28 years of age descended, with two of his mates, Joseph and Dan Darcy, a new shaft in the Goldfields Consolidated mine at Diamond Hill, Bendigo, to bore holes preparatory to blasting operations. The new shaft men had to bore the hole, insert the dynamite, high a low burning fuse, and then mount to a ladder to the platform where they were to await the explosion. Allan was the last man to leave. He lit the fuses and made for the platform, but he missed his footing and fell to the bottom of the shaft, where the fuses were ready to explode the charge. The men on the platform heard the fall, and one miner cried in agony, "Jack, at the slightest hesitation, rushed down the ladder to the rescue of his mate, regardless of the danger of meeting with a horrible death. On reaching the bottom of the shaft he found Allan huddled in the corner with his leg broken but still conscious.
