

A GUARANTEED CURE

For Indigestion and Dyspepsia

There is no hesitation or quibbling about the claims which the Coleman Medicine Company make for their wonderful "Little Digesters". They come out straight with the statement that "Little Digesters" will positively cure even chronic indigestion, or dyspepsia, as well as heartburn and sour stomach.

They GUARANTEE "Little Digesters" to cure. If they fail, you get your money back, promptly and without question.

Of course they would not make such positive statements, or give such a guarantee, if they had not proved, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that "Little Digesters" WILL CURE.

"Little Digesters" do it simply and naturally, too, by helping out the weakened stomach—supplying just what it needs in the process of digestion, and enabling it to assimilate the food. Soon the whole system regains its vigor, and the stomach needs no further help. "Little Digesters" are put up in little red boxes, sold for 25¢ by your druggist, or mailed by the Coleman Medicine Co., of Toronto.

Daily Whig.

A MOST DEGRADING INCIDENT.

The London election trial was memorable by the performance of one who, described as a liberal, was disappointed in his demands for office and emoluments, and supplied the enemy with damaging evidence, damaging even against himself.

In the Peterboro election trial the star witness was one who was said to have sold himself to the opposition, who, for a consideration, undertook to tell the secrets of the liberal party and to betray it, who wrote letters and enclosed the money that represented the alleged reptile fund. Counsel for Mr. Burnham, the defeated candidate, complained of the conspiracies against which he had to contend, but the worst conspiracy was that of the conservative party, and the exposure of it was the most degrading incident of the trial.

THE DOOLEY PHILOSOPHY.

The significance of Hon. Charles Murphy's remark at the St. John banquet, given in honour of Mr. Pugsley, is not apparent to some supporters of the liberal government. He said he stood with Mr. Dooley after he said, "That the tariff looks after will look after the tariff." The Dooley philosophy is well understood in the United States where the republican party, realizing that the consumer was becoming a political force and had to be respected, promised a revision of the tariff downward, and found the way to this reform blocked. By whom? "That that look after the tariff."

The president and his friends in the senate did what they could to redeem their protection promises, but the high tariff contingent carried the day. They were the beneficiaries and, as Mr. Dooley remarked, they looked after the tariff. Mr. Murphy is not standing in with those who would dictate terms and conditions to the government when tariff revision is under way. The time was when the protectionists had something to say about the rate of duty which would be charged on certain importations. They were called to the red parlour of a certain hotel and told what was expected from them, and they were equal to the demands of the hour.

It was not surprising that later they handed to the finance minister their requests and rested satisfied that they would be granted. It is not desired that there shall be a revival of that experience. The consumer in Canada is asserting himself, and both political parties are paying him attention, and it cannot be said that at present the tariff is looking after him. Mr. Murphy may not have been correctly quoted with reference to the Dooley philosophy, for it certainly does not reflect the mind of the average elector in Canada on the subject of tariff revision.

NEED OF THE CONVENTIONS.

Some one quotes the late George Brown, as saying in the Globe: "There is nothing more vital to the safe working of British constitutional government than the open declaration by each political party, previous to a general election, of the measures and principles it will carry out if successful at the polls."

Mark you, this is prior to an election. The record of some years is before the parties, and it is a platform which this suggests that conventions will consider. The government gives an account of its stewardship to the people, and it has either an apology or a defence to offer for some of its acts. Likewise the opposition has its defence to make. It has had its opportunities of approving or disapproving of the proposals laid before parliament by the government. Not being in favour of any proceeding or policy it is expected that something better will be recommended, and it is for the people to pass judgment upon it.

Conventions before an election are timely and proper. In the United States the great political gatherings which nominate candidates for the presidency submit at each the series of resolutions which reflect their mind. They represent the issues upon which the electors will meditate. Sometimes one hears that a political party is not living up to some declaration of the policy of 1873, or 1893, as if political parties must not change front on any subject.

In England there will be an election presently and there will be a confusion of ideas that the old parties will have lost their identification. It may be that some one will wonder why the liberal and conservative parties are not true to the provisions of twenty or thirty years ago, and in asking the question he gives evidence that he has been imitating Rip Van Winkle in his dream of years.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Globe is demanding the amendment of the criminal code, so that there will be an end to the gambling at any race course in Canada. Hopp its plan of campaign will succeed.

The small number of men, as compared with women, who are going into the teaching profession is lamented. The cause is quite apparent. The average pay for a teacher is not the pay of a man.

Capt. Bartlett, in command of the Roosevelt, and one of Peary's party, says petulantly, "Anybody can go to the pole nowadays." It is making light of a very difficult and hitherto impossible task.

So it seems Queen's College has a cinch in its coal contract so far as the cost of handling was concerned. The contractor made a slip in his calculations to the extent of twenty-five cents a ton. But he won't do it again.

John Bull must be immensely rich. No one knows what he is worth. His wallet is in demand by every nation under the sun, and though he is always lending he seems to have plenty left. How did he make his pile anyway?

Mr. Haultain's criticism of the new Ontario Readers has been delayed, but it is keen and analytical. Here is a man who was competent for the task of compiling school readers and was not, we presume, thought of by a discriminating government.

The Northlife plea is that Canadian prosperity has not been insured. That is his manner of referring to the fact that Canada has not the protection of a navy, outside of England's, which may have presently enough to do to protect the mother country.

What is whiskey? This is the question the inland revenue department of the United States has been trying to answer to its own satisfaction. The man who drank forty glasses of liquor in an evening and was not drunk must be deeply interested in the issue.

The president of the St. Lawrence Navigation and Improvement Association estimates that with a deepened Welland canal freight would drop two or three cents a bushel on grain, and this would mean a saving of $3,000,000 a year. To whom? The farmers or the western elevator men?

At a ladies' college function in Montreal, Abbe Lamerch pictured the future of women as in the home, and Dr. Guerin as writers of current literature and history. In England the women of the future are pictured as politicians, steeple chasers, roughs on the street, and gamblers on the race track. Which picture is the more attractive?

WASHES HIS COWS' TEETH.

Dairyman Believes Dental Attention is Profitable. An Ohio dairyman who goes to an extreme in modern ideas has a fad that a cow requires for the production of pure milk clean and healthy teeth, says the Utica Press. Three times a day he cleans the teeth of his cows, and he has some cream colored coats or capes made for them to keep off the flies.

It has been the contention of this party that cows would give more and better milk if more attention was paid to the dentistry of the dairy, and he claims that already his theory has been proven, while nearby farmers have been sufficiently interested in the experiment to try it on their own herds.

Keeping Milk By Chilling It.

One method of keeping milk consists in sterilization by heating to 230 deg. F., but this process changes the flavor of the milk, renders it indigestible and alters its chemical composition. Pasteurization at 176 deg. F. and simple boiling at 212 deg. F. are less objectionable, but although the germs of disease are destroyed by these methods other microbes are not destroyed and the milk, consequently, does not keep very long. Freezing is seldom effective because of the difference in the freezing points of the various constituents of the milk, so that when the milk is melted it does not possess its original uniform and homogenous character. Cooling to a temperature slightly above the freezing point has the advantage of leaving undisturbed the homogeneity, flavor, digestibility and nutritive value of the milk, and when cooled milk is again warmed to the temperature of the air it is found to have undergone no alteration that can be detected by the microscope or chemical or biological tests. Besides the cooling checks the multiplication of bacteria. The milk should be cooled immediately after it is drawn, or after pasteurization or boiling if these processes are adopted. When the milk is cooled to 35-42 deg. F. it may be kept several days at any temperature lower than 53 deg. F.

BOY'S BOASTFUL TONE

GIVES HIM FIVE MONTHS IN JAIL.

James McManus Admitted Striking George Snowden with a Stone, But Pleaded Self-Defence—He Didn't Appear Sorry For His Act.

Had eighteen year old James McManus exhibited a somewhat penitent tone when he described before Judge Price, on Saturday afternoon, how he had struck George Snowden on the head with a stone in the locomotive works three weeks ago, he might have been liberated on suspended sentence instead of being sent back to jail for a term of five months for his rash act. Young McManus told his story in an unfeeling manner that didn't impress the judge.

"I can't see that his three weeks in jail has done him a bit of good," said His Honor when Mr. Mowat appealed for leniency for McManus on the ground that he was the chief support of his widowed mother and that he had already spent three weeks in jail. "He doesn't seem a bit sorry for his act. It's just a miracle that the man struck was not killed. The doctor tells us that if he had not operated when he did, Snowden could not have lived many hours. As it is, he is incapacitated to a great extent."

Crown Attorney Whiting arose to remark that Snowden had a wife and child, who were nearly starved by a husband and father. The case was a sad one he admitted, but justice had to be done to all concerned. It was necessary, he said, to punish McManus in order to deter others.

This stone throwing and using of knives and pistols has got to be stopped," declared His Honor. "I would favor getting hold of every boy who throws stones, and give him a sound flogging. It is a dangerous practice."

Mr. Mowat remarked that it was unfortunate that Snowden's skull had been thin. "The force of the stone would not have done much damage to a man with a thick skull. "But thin-skulled men have to be protected as well as thick-skulled men," said Mr. Whiting. "I don't know whether my skull is thin or thick, but I want protection."

"If the boy had shown that he was sorry for his act, I might have been inclined to leniency, but he hasn't shown one spark of regret for an act that has caused the death of this man," said the Judge. "Might I suggest corporal punishment with his mother's consent," said Mr. Mowat.

"No, I haven't power to do that. The law is here to be carried out. I wouldn't make a law with parents' consent, although I see it is done in the police court. I won't do that here."

"I sentence you to five months in jail," concluded His Honor, and the youthful prisoner was led back to prison by the turkey.

The evidence for the crown was about the same as that given in the police court on Friday. Dr. Kilborn testified to the injuries of Snowden, whose skull, he said, was thin. About two inches of iron had been removed. It would be a couple of months before Snowden could return to work, although he was around now.

The young prisoner told his story in a boastful tone of voice. He admitted striking Snowden with a stone, but pleaded self-defence. Snowden, he said, came down off a tank as he was passing and blamed him for throwing coal at him. He denied the charge, and Snowden, he said, struck him three times with a stone. He was against the wall, McManus said he broke away and ran to the door, followed by Snowden. He warned the latter if he attacked him again, he would strike him with a stone, and he kept his promise. Snowden, he said, staggered back and fell under the door.

The plea of self-defence was not entertained by the Judge, who said that McManus could not have been in any danger when whatever scuffling there was had not drawn the attention of the U.S. Press. He was satisfied that there was no intention to seriously injure Snowden, but the fact remained that a serious injury, almost a fatal one in fact, had been inflicted.

A Very Natural Result.

Waterworks plant in the city of Montreal, the incantation it looks as if the Canadian prohibition, making raw material more expensive, would force up the price of paper on this side of the line in spite of the tariff bill, which seems to benefit certain papermakers or publishers.

American mills have large tracts of forest land in Canada, but if they cannot get the product except by paying a heavy export duty they will have to move to their Canadian tracts to utilize the timber. The tariff barrier is just what Canada hopes to bring about.

The Ruling Passion.

The editor was dying, says an exchange, but when the doctor laid over, placed his ear to the breast and said, "Poor man! circulation almost gone!" the dying editor got up and shouted: "You're a liar; we have the largest circulation in the country."

WAYWARD GIRLS HELPED.

Probationary Treatment May Save From Evil Careers.

Albany, N. Y., Oct. 2.—Anxious parents, who are perplexed to know what to do with girls from eleven to fifteen years of age that are inclined to be wayward, will be interested in the possibilities of the probationary treatment of young girls. According to reports made by probation officers in various parts of the state to the state probation commission, a large proportion of the girls placed under the oversight and control of probation officers are improved in conduct.

The case of a thirteen-year-old Italian girl, who was planning to elope with a man of bad reputation, is cited in a pamphlet just issued by the state probation commission to illustrate the benefits of probationary treatment. The girl had been disobedient at home and stayed away from school. It took probation officer and the teacher to overcome her restlessness in school, but gradually it disappeared and also her conduct at home grew better. The girl while on probation came to regret her behavior and is now doing well both in school and at home.

Very few girls are arrested until their ungovernableness and waywardness reach such a stage as to be difficult to overcome. Such girls, says the pamphlet, may often be helped if put under the control and influence of a woman probation officer sufficiently early. Parents who object to having their daughter arrested because of the disgrace and the possibility that the court might commit her to an institution, often are willing to have her summoned into the judge's private office, without the notoriety of an arrest, and put under the oversight and influence of a woman probation officer. The probation officer befriends the girl, interests her in wholesome amusements or useful occupations and sees that she avoids bad companions and undesirable places.

Sees Murder In Dream.

Stockholm, Oct. 2.—The identification of a murderer by a man who never saw the prisoner will be attempted just as soon as Gen. Bojerin, who is critically ill in the west of Sweden, is strong enough to look at the photos of the man who assassinated Gen. Beckman, on June 26. At the very hour that the crime was committed, but many miles away from the scene of it, Gen. Bojerin, saw in a vision his old friend shot down in Stockholm. Suddenly he shouted: "Drop that, you scoundrel!" When the nurse sought to calm him he tried to spring out of bed. "Can't you hear?" he cried. "Can't you see the smoke? They have murdered Gen. Beckman. Heved all night, but at daylight grew calmer and slept an hour. When he awoke he said: "You will find Gen. Beckman has been murdered. I am sure of it." He even described the crime in detail. At 9 o'clock the papers arrived telling of the assassination of Gen. Beckman. The nurse says the published version of the crime and the sick man's dream tally in all essential parts.

Justified In Killing Wife.

Paris, Oct. 2.—In the court of assizes Edmund Baudin, a mechanic, 40 years old, was acquitted of the murder of his wife. Women became hysterical and men wept as the prisoner recited his story. For years his wife had suffered from a frequently recurring neurosis. Repeatedly she had on her knees begged him to kill her and end the misery. On the night of the murder the medicine was exhausted and he offered to have it replenished. She implored him to kill her. In madness he seized a pistol and shot her. He at once thought of taking his own life, but had a helpless sister to support. On her advice he surrendered. As Baudin emerged from the court room he was given a rousing reception.

Young Bandmaster Weds.

Detroit, Mich., Oct. 2.—At Wayne Casino a week ago Francis Creatoro, a young Italian bandmaster, began an engagement. Among the listeners was Miss Irma Orphina Calamara. "It was love at first sight," said Mme. Calamara. "My daughter was fascinated with the attainments of the young director. I wrote a note to Mr. Creatoro, asking him to include certain Italian selections in his program, and he became greatly interested in us from the fact that we were so interested in Italian and Italian music. He came to call and the young couple became devoted to each other. The wedding brings happiness to us all."

An Endless Chain.

Harper's Weekly. Both father and mother struggled valiantly to teach little Effie to repeat the letter "A." The child emphatically refused to pronounce the first letter of the alphabet, and after many vain efforts the father retired from the room discouraged. The mother took the little girl on her lap and pleaded with her affectionately. "Dearie, why won't you learn to say 'A'?" she asked. "Because, mamma," explained Effie, "des' as soon as I say 'A' you and papa want me to say 'B.'"
