Peace After Battle. Mr. Roblin and Mr. Foster exchanged compliments at the recent banquet with a gracious condescension which put the renowned Gaston and Alphonse completely in eclipse, but, if what the Winnipeg conservatives say to one another, is true, this was a case of peace after battle. The report is that before the dinner they had a royal row over the naval question, Mr. Roblin attacking and Mr. Foster defending the position assumed by the parliamentary conservative party at the last session of parliament. Mr. Foster's intention to speak doned upon Mr. Roblin declaring that in that case he would not attend the banquet. To keep the peace it was decided that the question of naval defence should be tabooed, with the curious and significant result that no mention was made at the banquet of the one political issue of moment in Canada. Instead there were floods of
