MAYOR COUPER.

Some very bright plays are being produced continually, written by the best dramatists of both this country and Europe, but there has never been a comedy written that is the peer of "Other People's Money," by Edward Owen Towns.

"Other People's Money," is an old stock broker of Chicago, worth millions, and who thinks he is about the smartest thing that has happened since the Board of Trade proposes to marry his only daughter to an old rich dealer because he is very rich.

Major Couper, when interviewed today, stated that he would not think of offering himself for re-election if he had not been made to feel that the people wanted him.

The mayor's attitude during the year he has certainly made him a popular man with the people, and it would be an exceptionally popular man who would go to the polls and defeat him.

And yet, there is something more terrible in sight a scrotal rupture, threatening the small as well as the large ruptures.
