STRIKES ILLEGAL MAKING LEADERS LIABLE TO IMPRISONMENT.

Lockouts Are Included—Manufacturers As Well As Heads of Labor Organizations Are Forbidden to Call For Cessation of Work.

Sydney, N.S.W., Dec. 22.—Business has been so demoralized by the cost strike that the legislature took the drastic step of passing a bill making both strikers and employers who instigate or aid a strike or lock-out liable to a year's imprisonment.

The various governmental attempts made in Australia and New Zealand to settle the labor problem have been followed with interest in this country on account of the drastic nature of some of the legislation passed and because those countries—especially New Zealand, which was the first country to have compulsory arbitration in industrial disputes—are often referred to as "the workers' paradise." The labor party in the New South Wales legislature was so strong that on its aid or emity depended the success or failure of the government, and it was in this way enabled to force concessions.

Compulsory arbitration was embodied in a law of the state and a minimum wage was fixed by law. It was found, however, that the compulsory arbitration law failed of its purpose, which was to prevent strikes. Workers refused to abide by the decision of the arbitration court when these decisions were against them.

Clashes occurred on the appointments of district commissioners of conciliation, G. C. Wade, premier of New South Wales, declaring that the arbitration law was a failure, introduced new legislation called the "industrial disputes act" to remedy the defect. This was bitterly fought by the labor party, which proclaimed the "right to strike" as its inalienable privilege.

CHURCHILL DENOUNCED.

His Vitriolic Attacks on His Own Class Resented.

London, Dec. 21.—Seldom in the memory of man has there been as much personal bitterness in British politics as has resulted from the budget and its rejection by the house of lords. The attacks made on the character and capacity of the peers have aroused strong indignation in the circles of the aristocracy, and this indignation has been directed mainly against Winston Churchill.

Chancellor Lloyd-George comes from the people. The lords and ladies are content to regard his fierce onslaughts as evidence of his ignorance. The radical peers are either literary parvenus, like Lord Morley, with no connection with Mayfair, or the society of dukes, or else they possess the charm of moderation which disarms enmity. Lord Crewe, who introduced the budget in the house of lords, is Lord Rosebery's son-in-law, and his speeches are always honeyed and polite. Lord Carrington, the minister of agriculture, and a personal friend of King Edward, is a general country gentleman with whom nobody, not even an angry marquis, can possibly quarrel. But Winston Churchill falls into quite another category. By birth he belongs to the aristocracy. He is the grandson of a duke, and the present Duke of Marlborough is his first cousin. He is a political turncoat, having changed from Toryism to radicalism, mainly, it is suggested, through hatred of Joseph Chamberlain, and his conversion has gained him high office. Moreover, he is a "vitalist" antagonist, and his speeches are vitriolic. No man in British public life possesses so fine a gift of denunciation, and no one is less restrained. He denounces his own order every time he mounts the platform, and he is hated with a complete and bitter hatred.

Winston Churchill's sarcastic references to Lord Rothschild, the great international banker, have been particularly remarked, and they are denounced as evidence of gross ingratitude. On the death of Churchill's father, Lord Randolph Churchill, his affairs were found to be in considerable confusion, and Lord Rothschild personally undertook to unravel the difficulties and to make best possible provision for the sons. For a child to accept a task of this sort is not generally known in England, the president of the board of trade owes a great deal of his career to the kindness of the financier. It is now threatened that if Winston Churchill should make any further attack upon Lord Rothschild he will be publicly reminded of Lord Randolph's ruin, and this will create a stir unparalleled in sedate British public life.

To some extent Churchill is saved from direct snubs by the charm of his young wife, but he is rarely asked to dinner by his relatives and old friends, and this is a snub that cuts an Englishman to the marrow of his bones. He is a member of the Turf Club, the aristocratic house where King Edward regularly played bridge before his accession, but whenever he goes there he is deliberately and systematically cut by his fellow-members. Churchill is not a man to be trifled with, and he still complains of the most trying of all classes in the country, regard him with aversion and wait on him with evident disinclination.

Churchill attended the recent army manoeuvres as an officer of the Oxfordshire Yeomanry. On the last day the cavalry were all drawn up in extended line and were standing at ease, the officers being dismounted and chatting together in groups. Churchill rode with his orderly from one end of the line to the other without a single man of his brother officers taking the slightest notice of him.

GIVES $10,000 TO SERVANT.

Mistress Remembered Her—Only Five Years.

New York, Dec. 22.—The happiest woman in this city yesterday was probably Margaret Higgins, who, during the last twelve or fourteen years, has filled several places as a servant in city and suburban households. She worked for five and a half years for Miss Annie Johnson, a wealthy spinster of Red Bank, N. J. She accompanied Miss Johnson to this city two years ago and lived with her for six months at 2,131 Broadway.

"I'm going to go down and live with my niece in Florida and won't need you any more," the elderly spinster told Margaret eighteen months ago. "But you have been a good servant to me, Maggie, and I'm going to remember you in my will."

Margaret dutifully saw her mistress off to Florida, got another place through an employment agency, and says she soon forgot all about the promised legacy. But her former mistress went to a bank to make sure that the cheque represented real money. She found that it did, and alternately laughed and cried from happiness.

She told a reporter yesterday that she did not know yet how she was going to spend the money, for she has young nephews and nieces, who, she says, need some attention. She will probably settle in Red Bank.

A QUEER CEREMONY.

Carried on at a Christening By Indian Tribe.

The christening of a child is one of many religious ceremonies of the Hopi, an Indian tribe who still survive in the great desert of Arizona. For nineteen days after the birth, the mother and child are kept indoors, and not a ray of sunlight is permitted to enter the room. At dawn of the twentieth day, the mother, arrayed in her bridal robes, and accompanied by all her female relatives, walks to the very edge of the cliff, the desert lying hundreds of feet below. The grandmother carries the child and holds it until the time of the christening ceremony, while the mother and the other women form a half-circle round her, all facing the east.

Just before the sun appears, a high priest of the clan to which the mother belongs marches toward the waiting woman and grandmother. The different women of the party have each selected a name for the little one—no common-place or meaningless names such as civilized babies are burdened with, but poetic phrases typifying some hope or meaningful names such as "Rushing Water," "Fleet Antelope," or "Golden Butterfly." Dying of Cholera

Local Physician Says Thousands Dying in Europe Can Be Saved With Proper Medicine.

What is it that keeps down cholera, cramps, and summer complaints in America? Ask any doctor or live druggist and he will tell you "Nerviline." Just fancy, a million bottles are sold every year to people who use Nerviline for stomach disorder, cramps, flatulence, and summer complaint. For fifty years in most Canadian homes no other pain-relieving medicine but Nerviline is kept. Nothing cures the aches, pains and sickness of the entire family so quickly as Nerviline.

"As far back as I can remember, at least 50 years ago, there was never a time that our house was without 'Nerviline.' In the summer time, when the children ate green apples and got sick with diarrhoea and cramps, it was Nerviline that cured them. My father used Nerviline frequently to cure gas on his stomach and acute indigestion. There are but few minor ailments that Nerviline does not cure, and I know of no medicine so useful; in fact, so indispensable around the home as Nerviline."

This letter, written by Mrs. N. C. Butcher, a well-known resident in Batavia, shows the high opinion entertained of Nerviline by those who have used it constantly for nearly half a century.

You'll never regret using Nerviline. Get it to-day, keep it on hand for an accident or sudden case of sickness in your home. Refuse anything else offered you instead of Nerviline. 25c. per bottle, or five for $1.

Back of Chin. Is a country where the average yield per acre, of wheat, oats and barley cannot be equaled by any state in the Union—spring wheat running from twenty to fifty bushels per acre, winter wheat from twenty to sixty five bushels, oats from sixty five to one hundred and thirty five bushels, and barley from thirty to sixty bushels. The cost per acre to raise an average crop market price, and figure out what the net returns are to the man owning a section of land. This indicates the resources back the town of Chin.

INK THE ROMANS USED

For Writing Permanent Records— Stylus and Wooden Tablets.

The ancient Romans commonly wrote with a metal point (stylus) on wooden tablets covered with wax (tabulae), but permanent records were written on parchment with a reed pen and liquid pigment, or ink. At Haltern, in Westphalia, near the site of the Aluso fortress erected by Drusus in the year 11 B.C., was recently found a bronze vessel containing a dried black mass which Prof. Kasser has decided to be Roman ink. The mass was found to consist chiefly of soot and tannate of iron. It also contained smaller quantities of ferric oxide, copper oxide, clay, magnesite, gypsum, phosphoric acid, carbonic acid, alkalies and sand. These ingredients probably represent chiefly accidental impurities which have found their way into the ink, but some of them may be due to the chemical action of the ink on the bronze vessel.
