It is unfortunate that the countrythe province or the dominion-cannot retain in the public service the men of the first rank or ability. The Mail says it is because "the public has not yet learned how to reward its best servants." Is that the correct theory? The government is not in a position to compete with the capitalist and the corporation with regard to the employment of men. The federal tovernment has a Civil Service Commission which is empowered to ac vance the members of the civil service according to their merits. There are examinations for promotion and when they are passed the successful ones are given the saturies attached to the higher classes.
