Dalton, the Point St. Charles man who was recently arrested on a charge of bigamy, was brought into court, today, to permit of the presentation before the court of the two marriage certificates. Dalton pleaded guilty the other day and still maintaining that plea, stated that the reason he fed his first wife was that she fed him on buns. The day he left, he had a dozen buns for his dinner. He does not think that was the way for a wife to treat a hungry man. He was sent up for trial.

DOCTOR PLAY AT THE BIJOU.
Everybody has read of blood transfusion, and how men have really given up their life blood to save some dear one from death. This is the turning point of a drama at the Bijou to-morrow entitled "Transfusion." "The Blacksmith's Blood," in which a brave workman sacrifices himself for an heiress with whom he has fallen in love. The transfusion scene was posed by two eminent physicians of New York, and is scientifically correct. It is not at all unpleasant to witness, and the play is an excellent one. The second drama, to-morrow is a society one, entitled "A Victim of Bridge Whist." It is a particularly interesting and amusing play, and a burglary which is brought in gives an element of excitement. To-day's programme will include "Transfusion," "Stunts on Skates," and "The Wild-woman of the Rained Castle."

Mrs. Dow and her daughter, Miss Lucy, were able to give but a slight description of the murderer. The police say that in a general way the crime resembles those of a man who terrorized the city last fall.

The murder was a most wanton one. Mrs. Dow, her two daughters and Miss Blackstone, who was a guest for the night, were seated in the living room of a home about a small table solving a picture puzzle. Suddenly there came a demand for money from the dining-room, just in the rear. The women looked up to see a masked man in the dark doorway threatening them with a revolver. Mrs. Dow retained her composure, and replied, "We have no money," but Miss Blackstone, in fright, jumped to her feet and ran screaming into the reception room. The burglar said, "If you want to be killed keep on screaming," and fired his revolver. The bullet entered Miss Blackstone's left breast, and death was instantaneous. The murderer hardly paused to see his victim fall before he turned the revolver on the group, shooting Miss Dow in the head. He then jumped through the front door, leaped over the piazza railing, and ran away. Both of the victims were teachers in the Jefferson avenue school.

The inhabitants of the town have fled or been driven by the police to outlying districts or neighboring towns. The terror of the peasantry about the slopes of Etna grows more pitiful hourly. Another village, was reported to-day to be in danger, and the plight of Nicolosi was declared no better.

THE PLANET JUPITER.

Is Being Watched Nightly for Change in Zones.

Now that the planet Jupiter is well placed for observation the large observatories throughout the world will watch this king of planets nightly to note any change in his zones or belts. The following data will enable the casual observer to form some idea of its importance. Jupiter's mean distance from the sun is 477 millions of miles; his orbit around the sun is 3,900 million miles, and he accomplishes the entire circle in about twelve years. This vast body, whose dimensions are about eleven times that of the earth, rotates on his axis in nine hours 55 min. and 49 sec., thus in the time we have one day and night he has two, each about five hours long, with his own moons, seven in number, apparently flying across his heavens more than twice as fast as the celestial bodies appear to traverse ours. Should there be any inhabitants living at his equatorial regions they would be carried around at the rate of 25,000 miles per hour, which is 24 times faster than the equatorial inhabitants of the earth are carried. The density however, is only about one-fourth that of the earth, but little exceeding water, therefore the quantity of matter in that vast orb is only 330 times greater than the earth. The changes of seasons which we experience is a diversity unknown to this planet, owing to the axis being nearly perpendicular to the plane of the orbit. Should the poles be inclined similar to our globe, it would experience a winter of six years in length toward its polar regions. The planet is plainly visible in our eastern sky each evening and can easily be distinguished by the naked eye from others owing to its brilliancy, and with telescopic aid its moons are always an object of interest.

Perpetual Motion.
Little Jimmy had arrived at the questioning age. He had just made an inquiry concerning perpetual motion of his father.

"No," said his father, "nobody has ever discovered perpetual motion yet. But Jimmy was not quite satisfied. "What is perpetual motion like, dad?" he asked next.

His father thought a moment. "Why, it's pretty hard to say, Jimmy," he replied, "but it's something that keeps going and going forever. Here is an illustration. I once saw a woman in a train who had put on her gloves. She then tried to button her right hand glove, but she found that she must take off her left hand glove to do so. She took it off and buttoned the right hand glove. Then she said that in order to button her left hand glove she must take off her right hand glove, which she did. Then she put on her left hand glove, buttoned it and put on the right hand one again. But she couldn't button her right hand glove with her left hand glove on, so she took off—That, Jimmy," he said after a pause for breath, "is what perpetual motion would be like if you could get it."
