WHY make yourself uncomfortable with an old-fashioned corset when you can have the latest physique effect and be comfortable with the New La Diva Renaissance Corset.

"A pudding bag with a string around it." An old-time description which applies to many figures today—thanks to the ordinary corset. This "pudding bag" effect is bad both for health and for style.

The corset to wear is one which gives that smooth flowing physique—that holds one together comfortably—healthfully.

On these lines Madam the new La Diva Renaissance Corset will be a revelation to you, as to style, comfort—health—it will give you a physique no other corset can give. We spent thousands of dollars perfecting this corset.

GOVERNANCE OF INDIA

FRENCHMAN'S VIEW OF BRITISH RULE IN THE EAST.

M. Joseph Chailley of the Chamber of Deputies, after a Study of Eastern Affairs, Has Collaborated on a Book in Which He Pays a Glowing Tribute to Great Britain's Work Among the Hindu Races.

M. Joseph Chailley, a member of the French Chamber of Deputies, has, with the co-operation of Sir Will. Meyer, written a valuable and important study of the present-day conditions of the Indian Empire.

The Radical politician and the Babu aspirer attempt to deny that East is East and West is West. A set of facts printed by M. Chailley in an early chapter clearly indicate the vast difference.

As regards child marriage, the statistics are stupefying. In India the 1901 census showed 121,500 married boys and 245,500 married girls whose age was under five; between the ages of five and ten the figures are 769,000 and 2,030,000 respectively; between ten and fifteen, 2,540,000 and 6,535,000.

Further, there were no less than 1,277,000 widows, persons under twenty, of whom 914,000 were under 10. Of these, 6,000 widowers and 96,000 widows were less than five years of age; 37,000 widowers and 96,000 widows between five and ten; and 113,000 widowers and 376,000 widows between ten and fifteen.

Could any figures more dramatically demonstrate the entire dissimilarity of social conditions? M. Chailley notes in the Indian an Oriental disinclination to work.

"At first sight everybody seems to be taking an active part in some common toil; as a matter of fact, several persons are looking on at the labor of one. As has been cynically remarked, out of five people who seem to be working, one is doing nothing, one is resting, one is looking on, and another is helping the previous three."

Much, naturally, is said of the much-discussed National Party, but it is insisted that it stands for a small class and a small part of the Empire.

"As a matter of fact, this so-called National party is really a party of privilege, a concourse of representatives of the high castes and the rich classes, which is really a danger to the nation on whose behalf it professes to speak."

"What would rejoice the Babus of Bengal and the Poona Brahmans would be likely to cause grave displeasure to the men of action in the United Provinces and the Punjab."

M. Chailley points out some of the weaknesses of British rule, and explains the native unrest, but he adds: "It would be wrong, however, to conclude from the remarks in this chapter that the peoples of India are weary of British supremacy or administration. The loyalty of the great majority is still incontestable, and it extends to students, lawyers, Doctans, Brahmans, and even to the Rajas of Bengal and the chieftains of the National party. This was clearly shown by the universal and spontaneous mourning at the death of Queen Victoria."

The sharp distinction between the races and the lack of social mingling are, as always, observed, but even these are not universal.

"The British officers of the Indian army and the frontier officials are fond of the natives, their companions in sport and war. The Englishman in India has a respect for the native soldier on the Northwest Frontier and in the Punjab and Rajputana."

"A British officer's native orderly is not a menial servant; he only looks after his master's wardrobe, and is devoted to him, and if he is ill will pass nights by his bedside; while on the field of battle he will save him or die with him. On actual military service the soldier is disciplined and respectful and the officer stiff, but outside they talk freely."

"The soldier asks advice from his officer, and will consult him on his family affairs or about a lawsuit. The officer listens and helps, and, outside the barracks, will talk with a Sepoy and speak to him familiarly. Hence, there is a rapprochement, due to common dangers and common tastes, but it is an exception."

M. Chailley points out, too, that there is little social life among the natives themselves.

"The wife of the well-known and lately-deceased Justice Takhaj of the High Court of Bombay said in 1903 at the annual meeting of an Indian ladies' club: 'We complain, Europeans keep aloof from us, but that is largely our fault. I ask you how many among ourselves, Hindus, Mussalmans, or Parsis, want to meet and differ? Is it pride or reserve which keeps us apart? Is it not rather a difference in manners, habits, education, dress, language, and religion? Let us,' she added, 'begin by union among ourselves.' These are significant remarks."

"The Government of India might, as many other Governments do, regard its work with placid and silent contentment," says M. Chailley. "But its passion for the public good and its desire for improvement constantly impel it to check its conceptions by their results. It examines, blames, and reforms itself, and, as a consequence, it seems to condemn itself in the eyes of superficial critics."

"But any one who has studied its ample legislative work and examined, stage by stage, its different and successive creations, feels himself bound to set aside the criticisms which the slothless or the imperiousness of this work might provoke, and to render homage to the conscientiousness and knowledge which it displays."

"The Indians only plead their talent and cleverness; the English are especially pre-occupied with character. What they look to mainly is the moral value of the man: coolness in decision, rapidity in action, a conscience which can resist temptation, and an energy which can face threats—in fine, a sentiment of duty towards one's country and oneself."

A right-of-way through Garden River reserve has been secured for the railway from Sault Ste. Marie to Sudbury and tenders for the construction of the road will be called at once.
