When Instructor Was Making an

The Argenaut. At the age of twenty-two, Jean Richepin/accepted a place as instructor in literature in a school which prepared students for the military colege of Saint-Cyr. His employer warned him that the future army officers took very little interest in belles-lettres, and that their principal occupapin's first lesson began amidst a storm of whistling and cat-calls. But the young instructor's voice boomed out above the uproar, and imperiously commanded silence. "Gentlemen," he said, "I am not here because I like it. I am here for my living. Is any one of you going to stand in the way? If there is, I should be obliged he Place du Pantheon, where I am ready to meet him at any time. And the same age, you understand, of ourse, that the interview will be with bare fists." And so saying, oung Richepin brought his clenched hand down upon the desk, and the pupils lived happily ever afterward. Thus runs the official legend

It is well-known that Messrs. Fielding and Paterson, who would be dispensable in such negotiations, made arrangements many months ago to go to England in June and conclude their work of the West India trade commission. As a consequence September seems the earliest date negotiations can be had and the delay till then is

As the president has been fully appraised of this fact, it is not considered that the delay will imperil th outcome of the negotiations.
