BUDGET FROM CROSSBY.
Cheese Factory Takes Milk on Saturday Evenings.
Crossby, June 1.—The grain crops and meadows throughout this vicinity are looking fine, and there is every prospect of an abundance of both grain and hay. Cows never milked as well at this season of year, owing to the grain being above the average.

Crossby cheese factory being unable to cope with the large supply of milk on Monday mornings has thrown its doors open to its many patrons Saturday evenings. This is much appreciated by the farmers who will be relieved of the responsibility of taking care of Saturday night's milk over Sunday through the warm weather.

A number from here attended police court at Newboro last Monday evening, the chief attraction being the trial of a prominent young man of that village for having committed an assault. The accused was sent up for trial.

Mr. Florence Proud, who shortly after entering a Watertown, N.Y., hospital as nurse-in-training, was taken suddenly ill, has returned to her home much improved.

Court of revision for the township was held in Elgin last Monday, but there was only one appeal, which was allowed. The assessor is certainly the right man in the right place, and the township council should put forth a strong effort to retain his services for next year, in fact as long as he can give of his time and ability to the work.

Mrs. Taggart, a professional nurse, who attended Mrs. B. M. Cannon has returned to her home in Smith's Falls.

The young people's Epworth league meetings are well attended. Miss Blanche Culbert was in charge last Tuesday evening. Miss E. Bold Warrior Vanquished

Buffalo, N.Y., Times.

I went to the sixth war at eighteen with my uncle, an old "regular," as his orderly, he being held responsible by my mother that no harm should come to me. This was rather remarkable since I was going to war, but it was necessary, I being heir to a large fortune, and if I were killed it would go to my mother.

It turned out that I needed to be protected from something as dangerous, so my mother considered, as the bullet—that is, a sweet, little, penniless country girl. One day when riding past a small plantation I espied a small miss with soft eyes, an immense cable of hair reaching almost to her heels and a lithe, trim figure, with a peach bloom in each cheek. She was standing at the gate looking at us soldiers as we passed. We went into camp near by, and that night I stole away to find her. The result was a love affair, which I confided by letter to my mother.

One morning my uncle called me in to his tent and stormed at me for a young idiot, threatening that if I did not give up this foolish business he would break me and send me home. I told him that he could not break me without cause and I would do as pleased in the matter.

"Very well," he said, "I will go to the girl. These country people are easily bought off."

I kept a close watch on his movements, and when he called on my lady-love I was in an adjoining room, concealed by a curtain. There was a flutter about the house as he rode up.

"Where is your daughter?" he thundered to the meek little mother as he stalked into the house. To the linings of his spurs and the rattle of his sword.

"Oh, general," cried the poor woman, "take everything, but do not burn the house! It is our only home."

"Nonsense! I'm not going to harm you. I want to speak with your daughter."

"The silver is in the well. Take it. Only leave us in peace."

"My good woman, do you take me for a robber? All I wish is to speak a few words to your daughter concerning—well, concerning a private matter."

"She is in there. Don't hurt her, general. She is only a child."

By this time my ferocious uncle had discovered that he had to deal with a different kind of enemy from what he had been accustomed to. He whirled his mousetrap nervously as he stepped into the room, where he was confronted by a delicate girl of seventeen.

"You—I mean that young idiot of a nephew of mine."

I had seen the general, advancing at the head of his troops, and suddenly brought up by an enemy in force, but unappalled. Now he was paralyzed at facing a young girl. He pulled himself together and captured his volley of words:

"The match is not to be thought of. My nephew is a young fool!"

"The general faltered. His enemy was standing with her hands crossed deliberately before him, her eyes bent on the floor, looking up occasionally at the warrior to see if he was going to run her through with his sword."

"My nephew," she said, "started on again in his nothing but a boy with with confounded good taste, the young rascal!"

Having made a failure in a direct attack he concluded to attempt to accomplish his ends by stratagem.

"My dear child," he said, "there are a great many reasons why you should be a good little girl and give up this boy, who hasn't sense enough to keep out of an ambush of idiots. Now, what I want you to do is to promise—"

The general stopped, stilled. The girl looked up at him as much as to say, "What is it you wish me to promise?"

"He will be very rich," pursued the general, "and you, of course, will be—well, you are not rich, you know?"

The general halted to bring up his guns, but before he could do so his little enemy raised her shrinking figure and, looking him square in the face, said:

"General, you may tell him that he is free. I am a poor country girl. He is heir to a fortune. No one shall ever say that I was in command and she her assessor is certainly the right man in the right place, and the township council should put forth a strong effort to retain his services for next year, in fact as long as he can give of his time and ability to the work."

Acceptance Assured.

It was the first poem she had ever written, and when she slipped it through the stamp window there was a tiny blue bow popping out of the envelope.

"How much postage?" she ventured.

"Why, miss," responded the post-office clerk, "this is first class."

She blushed with happy embarrassment.

"Thank you for such a kind opinion," she hastened, "and my I how I wish you were an editor!"
