The ears of guiners are often out great guns, the tympanum of the ear has invented a simple device. Mariotti being frequently ruptured. Mariotti prevents these injurious effects without diminishing the sharpness of hearing.

The protector consists of a solid mass of glass of such form as to fit accurately the external ear, into which it is inserted. It is traversed horizontally by a perforation, the inner end of which almost touches the tympanum. The outer end of this horizontal passage does not quite reach the outer end of the mass of glass. Out connects with a vertical passage which communicates freely with the atmosphere above and below. The violent disturbance of the air caused by the artillery discharge produces an aspiration in the horizontal passage and consequently a rarefaction of the small mass of air confined between the tympanum and the glass
