SOME ONE SHOULD QUIT.

A Kingston gentleman just returned from a visit to the west, thus addresses the Whig:

"During a visit in Toronto I met a former resident of the city, now of a large American city, who is at the head of an industry. The object of his visit to Canada was to locate a branch of his business. From Toronto he communicated with several towns and cities, enquiring about locations, taxes and other things. Kingston came first in his thoughts, and he wrote the industrial committee of the city council. At the end of two weeks he received a reply. In the meantime western cities sent representatives to meet and give him all information he desired. Before Kingston's reply was received he had practically decided to go elsewhere. In the course of conversation this man told of one who was looking for a smelting site. He mentioned his native city, knowing of its admirable shipping facilities. His friend wrote the president of the board of trade and up to the present he has not received an answer."

Here is a statement that is surprising. Kingston wants industries, and its business men in the council, and board of trade, are understood to be on the lookout for them. Yet correspondence that might lead to results is tamely and tardily answered in one case, and ignored in another. Kingston may not be able to pay for a publicity department, as it exists in other cities, but it surely can afford to have at least one live man in its employment. The complaint being well founded (and the Whig is not disposed to question it), the men who presume to represent the industrial interests in the city should know enough to resign.

seems and he offers himself for a sacrifice into his party. Gifford Finlayson is getting his revenge.

The Bothnia has been in use for about fifteen years, and was built by the Calvin company, and was at first used in the timber trade. For several years the vessel has been used in carrying grain and coal.

Don't Like the New Law.

The new law just taken effect which allows boats under sixty feet to be run and piloted by any person without a license, is being severely criticized by Clayton, N.Y., steamboat captains, who claim that the numerous smaller craft will be a menace to navigation when run by inexperienced pilots, and will cause the large boats all kinds of trouble in avoiding accidents with them.

RIVER TRAFFIC HEAVY.

All the Vessels Report a Very Good Season.

This has been a good season for the boats on the river route. The trip to Quebec is just as popular as ever, and evidence of this fact is that the steamer Alexandria has had to refuse passengers from Kingston on the down trip, almost all the summer.

The Bay of Quinte Steamboat company report a good season, also the Thousand Island Steamboat company. The weather taken altogether has been fine, and there has been little to complain of.

A New Civic Commission.

Under a new charter, Port Huron, Mich., will abolish the office of aldermen, and the government of the city is given over to four commissioners, a mayor and three others. The Mayor will receive $2,000 and the commissioners $1,200 each. The water, fire, park, police and all other boards except the Board of Education and the Public Library Commission are abolished. The Board of Education is reduced from fourteen to four members. The offices of the Water Board and that of the City Treasurer are to be consolidated, effecting a saving in salaries. The City Clerk is made the purchasing agent for the city, under the direction of the commission. The purpose of this is that everything required by the city shall be bought for cash, an advantage may be taken of discount, which it is believed will amount to thousands of dollars every year.

Supposing the city does lose an industry or two because the council and its committee have suspended animation during the summer, what is the difference? The loss of business is nothing as compared with the loss of the rest for which the average alderman is forever in search.

THE TEMPTATION TO KILL.

The American papers contain learned disquisitions upon what should be done with the criminals, or what should be done to make life safer. There is a decided division of public opinion. There are those who think that the punishment of the guilty must be severe.

In England, it is pointed out, there is no trifling with the great offenders. Conviction being secured there is immediately a convincing evidence of the majesty of the law. Justice is administered without fear, favour or affection. In Germany the criminal is made to feel that society has no use for him. If he escapes from the toils he makes sure he will not on any account be apprehended and imprisoned again.

Only in America, and in Canada occasionally in recent years, is there any squeamishness out of place, any faltering with justice, any failure to make the common and unconscionable criminal feel the hurtful influence of the law.

Of course, for the insane man there is always a sympathy. But the question of insanity should be considered after the conviction of the individual, not before it.

In other words, the contention of a well-known alienist holds good. The courts, and especially the juries, should not be harassed by the arguments of learned men as to the insanity of some offender. The modification of a sentence should depend upon evidence that a commission of experts can analyze.

In the Gaynor case it is suggested that Gallagher, the assailant of the mayor, may have been a madman for some time. He wrote disturbing or threatening letters, all of which are now produced and regarded as remarkable. The man, himself declares that he had to do something to emphasize his grievances, and he shot to kill. Why was he not arrested when he commenced this controversy? If the letters marked him as a madman he should have been put under arrest before he did the shooting.

The demand of the hour is for detectives who can lay hands on those who are showing an insane streak, and should be deprived of the fire arms they are now allowed to carry about. Gallagher had his revolver for years. What did he want with it? The average man who carries about a loaded piece is crazy, and sooner or later is liable to commit murder or suicide.
