Talks with the Advertising Man "Price or Service"

The store that bases its appeal for patronage on prices and prices alone is doing business on a one-side policy.

Price is a consideration, it is true, but service is equally important, and the merchant who does not make it a feature in his advertising is going to lose a lot of business he otherwise would get

Because service is a greater consideration than price to a very large section of any community. Some merchants have the faculty of selecting or training a superior class of clerks; salespeople who intelligently anticipate a customer's wants, who give their undivided attention to the customer they are serving, who do not carry on a conversation with a fellow clerk at the same time, and who are really anxious to please. Some stores deliver goods just when they are promised; not at noon when they were promised for nine o'clock. In some stores goods are returnable, and the price is refunded without the necessity of going through a lot of red tape.

These are all phases of store service which every customer- appreciates, yet it is seldom one sees them referred to in a store's advertising They are just as strong inducements to most buyers as price, and a straightforward statement of a store's service will win the best class of customers.

Of course, the service must be given before it can be made a basis of appeal for business.
