HOW 'DENTS' PRACTICE

FREE PATIENTS ARE ALWAYS AVAILABLE FOR STUDENTS.

At First They Are Only Allowed to Try on Themselves and Each Other, But In Their Third Year They Have Real Live Patients In the Infirmary-Impostors Are Kept Out-To Pay if You Can.

At the Dental College in Toronto over two hundred and fifty young "dents" are struggling with the intricacies of that learned profession, all hoping to hang out a gilt shingle with three letters annexed to their name, and incidentally the final fee that the University of Toronto condescends to receive from these youths for the D.D.S. is forty dollars. Some man reputed to have had more than ordinary intelligence has said that the way to learn to do is by doing. That's the principle that appears to run through the course of instruction given to young dentists. From the time they enter they do practice

The first two years of their course they are allowed to practice only on themselves, or on each other. Many victims wonder when the dentist "hurts" if he knows anything about the pain he causes. The chances are he does, after allowing other kid dentists like himself to put those horrid instruments in his mouth and burrow around looking for exposed nerves They take some awful chances, but seem to survive. If one gets hurt particularly bad, he keeps it quiet but doesn't forget it when it comes his turn to be operator.

The third year of his term he is al lowed a limited number of cases in the infirmary of the school when the free patients are treated. The idea of the infirmary is primar. ily charitable, and for twenty years now the institution has been caring for the poor and needy of Toronto without fee and without price. Mimico School, the Aged Women's Home, the Girls' and Boys' Home, and all the orphanages about the city have had orphanages about the city have had the privilege of sending any patients to the school, and their dental needs would be taken care of. Every week students from the college visit these and other similar institutions, and leave the cards of the school, which the matrons or superintendents can fill out, describing the work that the inmate needs. These cards are presented at the entrance of the college to a qualified examiner, who investigates each plea for assistance. The free patient is assigned to one of the e have more cases coming daily a we can attend to," said another demonstrator. "Yes, it is possible in some cases for a friend of a student to ask to be assigned to that student, but it is rarely done, as the examiner shows no favoritism. There are over 200 cases handled daily, during school term. Last year one of the graduates of the school, who is still connected with the college, stated that work was done-for about 23,000 little that it doesn't pay for the materials used. The whole work is supported by fees paid by students. The elinie or infirmary run in connection with the college represents to it very much the same as the General Hospital does to the medical school, but there is the big difference that the General Hospital receives Government aid, city aid, and private subscriptions. Here at the dental college is being carried on a work that must appeal to every one as a great boon to the masses, that receives not a cent of aid from any quarter. The medical college itself, run to relieve suffering and preserve the bodies, is a Government school, but this school Fun on almost identical lines is tirely independent and stands by

"One other class who present themselves as patients at the school are young women who have at an earlier date been inmates of one of the children's homes or girls' homes, but who now are out at service as domestics in various parts of the city. It means a lot to these people who have to economize to have their dentist's bill practically nil."

The clinic, besides its student dentists, employs about 25 demonstrators, who are qualified doctors of dental surgery, to be present at certain hours and supervise the work of the students. They also have employed half a dozen nurses and number of lady clerks. There is possibility that this staff will have to be increased on account of the Toronto Board of Education's decree to send all the pupils from the public schools who it is deemed necessary should receive dental attention

ANIMAL HEROES. MINISTER IN EMBRYO.

His Party.

One result of the reorganization of the Conservative party in the Canadian House of Commons is that a number of men whose names have not been hitherto very well known outside of their own constituencies, Ottawa, and the inner political circles, have been brought out into the limelight as prospective ministers when the time shall have come for a Conservative leader to form an administration. Among the promising new material thus brought to the attention of the people of Canada is Mr. Joseph E. Armstrong, M.P. for Lambton, who has been selected by Mr. Borden as chairman of the committee struck to keep a watchful eye on the Govern-ment's administration of the postoffice. Mr. Armstrong is something more than a mere successful politician. He is a sound business man and a social favorite-a man of splendid appearance and personal magnetism, that subtle quality which was such an important factor in Sir John Macdonald's career, and which is so seldom possessed by aspiring politicians. Mr. Armstrong - handsome, distinguished, jolly and kindly-is one of the best-liked men in Parliament; while among the "sessional women" at Ottawa there is no more attractive personality than his wife. The Armstrongs have rather held themselves back in Parhamentary circles hitherto; but now that Mr. Armstrong has been accorded official position in his party, more will be heard of them. Mr. Armstrong is forty-six years of age, and a native of York County Ont. His father was an Irish-Canadian, his mother an English woman. He is an Englishman in appearance and an Anglo-Irishman in character, being characterized by a keen sense c wit and a dogged determination to earry out whatever he sets his minupon. Mrs. Armstrong is a native of Chester, Pa., her father, James Shell Phipps, being descended from the old colonial family to which belonged the Admiral Phipps, who commanded the Anglo-Colonial expedition against New France, which retired somewhat ingloriously from before Quebec, when old Count de Frontenac sent back his answer to their challenge to surrender by the mouth of his cannon. Mr. Armstrong's chief business is the production of petroleum (he lives at Petrolea), but besides his extensive interests in that profitable industry he is a manufacturer, and also conducts farming on an extensive and scientific scale. He was unsuccessful in his first attempt to gain a seat in the House of Commons, being defeated in the general elections of 1896. He was

Joseph E. Armstrong Is New High In | Ernest Thompson Seton Appeals for Western Brutes.

Ernest Thompson Seton, the famous Canadian naturalist, author, and lecturer, spoke in Winnipeg recently on "Animal Minds and Heroes."

Defining a hero as one endowed with unusual gifts, and striking a happy medium between the extreme theories, one of which claims that an animal's mind is but a bundle of inherited instincts, and its opposite, which holds that animals have as man inherited instinct coupled with reason. Mr. Seton said that his purpose in portraying wonderful individual animals was to show to what height an animal could rise and yet belong to the same species. "Animals," said the speaker, "differ from man not in kind but in degree, and among animals the 'one which has painted a more variegated page on human history perhaps than any other is the wolf." He said that records of at least fifty of these heroes of their kind had been preserved. Mr. Seton related the story of one le Bete, the giant wolf who for four years terrorized France and was not captured until an army of 40,000 men was set on his trail, and then only after a weary struggle lasting The skin of this wolf was presented to King Louis, and was destroyed in the fire at the Tuilleries in 1871. Mr. Seton contrasted with this reign of terror the attitude of the modern wolf, educated through gunpowder to respect man. He said that the same change had come to pass in the relations of man with other animals, notably the grizzly bear, who now flees from even the Coming to the story of the wolf war of 1885-6,7, Mr. Seton said before that time the grey wolf had, finding its prey the buffalo vanished, become a menace to the cattle on the ranges. The bounty of $5 tempted many cowboys, the unsuspicious wolves were easy victims of the poison and trap, and in those three years fully 100,000 of the animals were killed. Mr. Seton himself was one of the band of wolvers, and he told of the cunning which finally made the hunted remnant in the foothills too wary to be easily caught. Those who had not been taught from experience, were taught by their fellows, who had learned to keep away from man, from poison, and from traps, and Mr. Seton said that this

Most interesting of these latter was the photo of the tree which by the marks of the claws in the bark told the story of Wab's chase of the black bear. Another was of the sulphur pool where the grizzly hero took his baths and still another was of the canyon into which Wab wandered and died overcome by the poisonous gases. Mr. Seton remarked that the curious part of this familiar story of Wab was that the very parts to which his critics took the most serious objections were the parts for which he had

The First Union Church.

The Town of Melville, Sask., is proud of meny thing In October. 1907, the first building went up, in vinter of 1907-08 only 30 people comprised the population; now in 1910 Melville is an incorporated town with nearly two thousand citizensthere's growth to be proud of. And she is proud of her streets and her fire-fighting appliances and of her municipal rink and of her $15,000 school; and now, last of all, of her Union Church.

There had been churches already During the first summer the only church in Melville was the German Lutheran, a large percentage of the farmers being of that creed. The Presbyterians and Methodists sheltered here for a season in a quite pretentious frame building with a tower. The English Church was next in architectural evidence, humble, with no tower and no stained glass. Followed the Roman Catholic, also humble in its size and quality, with its distinguishing cross and the distinction of having been erected in a shorter space of time than any of its fellows. The motives that led to the inauguration of the Union Church in November, 1909, were mostly common sense. The people wanted a good service and a good congregation and to be self-supporting. Also, they had the right man, Rev. Mr. Reid, from Ireland, liberal in views, kind, sympathetic and untiring. Among the members are Methodists, Congregationalists, Baptists, Presbyterians and some English Church folk. In doctrine and government, this Union Church has adopted that laid down by the joint committee of the Congregational, Pres. of a proper system of storekeeping, a byterian and Methodist bodies.

Melville modestly announces that she is going to show to the worldthe world, mind you-that where there is the spirit of toleration and good common sense union can become a

Auditing the Public Accounts. The cost of auditing the public accounts of Canada for several periods is interesting, and so great is its growth that it now exceeds $100,500 annually. Parliament established the office of Auditor General in 1878, and the act delines the purpose of his appolitiment as "for the more complete examination of the public accounts of Canada, and for the reporting thereon to the House of Commons." The Auditor-General's report, presented to Parliament in two or more bulky volumes, is the most used bluebook all that are issued. It contains, the details of the expenditure made each department, and furnishes much of the ammunition that is used by the financial critics of the Government. The Auditor-General is advised of all the moneys received and deposited to the credit of the Government, and checks the vouchers for the expenditures from these deposits and the credits given to the various departments. The Auditor-General is responsible for seeing that money voted by Parliament is used for the purpose for which it has been voted. He can hold up a payment, or demand an explanation of any disbursement, or refuse to sanction financial transpetions which, in his judgment, are irregular. Sometimes, but not very frequently, the Auditor-General's decision is over-ruled by the Treasury Board, which is composed of the M:nister of Finance and five other Cabinet Ministers. The staff of the Auditor-General numbers about one hundred at present. In 1900, the Auditor-General examined about $56,000,-000 of public accounts; this year he audited over $115,000,000 of public accounts. In commenting upon the irregularities at the Printing Bureau, the Auditor-General makes this recommendation to Parliament: "The existence of these irregularities emphasizes the necessity for the establishment systematic stock-taking and an inspec tion by competent inspectors in every branch of the service where stores are
