DIET OF CENTENARIANS. The One Absolute Requisite is That It Shall be Simple.

Ask the nonagenarian or centenarian as to his diet. Will he answer in terms of the bill of fares published monthly in some so-called health journals, where we find suggestions for luncheons bringing within the compass of a single meal samples of every class and category of non-nutritious substances—as if the mere absence of animal meat redeemed and made tolerable every incongruous mixture of food.

Farnaro, the famous Italian nonagenarian, lived during the last twenty years of his life on a diet largely consisting of a little wine, coarse bread, macaroni and cheese, enjoyed twice a day.

"A couple of years ago I met, at Long Beach, Cal., an old man who at the age of ninety-five years was as vigorous as a man of fifty and in full possession of all his faculties and senses.

"They may find their elixir of life on a diet of oatmeal and sweet milk in Scotland; on baked potatoes and salt, as in Ireland; on black bread, sauerkraut and small beer, as in the Rhine; on milk and barley cake, as in Bulgaria; white bread and black wine, as in Southern France; macaroni and cheese, as in Italy; rye bread, salt fish, sour milk, as in Sweden, etc.

ALL HEAD AND NO HEART Are Many Modern Girls Who Have Too Much Culture.

"Womankind," said a New York matron the other day, "is put into two classes. Leather, I should say, girl-kind, because we are talking about girls. In one class is the girl who is generally spoken of as 'serious minded.'"

These girls seem to the old saying that a woman's greatest work can be performed in the home, some of them talk very eloquently about the nobility of motherhood and all that, but as a matter of fact they really do not plan to marry.

At Wintipeg, Harry Melwell, a dining car conductor on the C.P.R., was found dead in the bathroom of his boarding house, and it is supposed that he was electrocuted by a defectively wired light.
