When the Children Go to Bed. Campbell Cole, in The Continent. When the children go to bed at night, it somehow seems to me...

Like the petals, pink and perfect of some rare and fragrant rose. Clad in garments, white and spotless, down they fall by mother's knees.

When the children go to bed at night, the air within the room seems redolent of the perfume of rich fields of clover bloom.

Can see about me growing the sweet flowers of Paradise kiss their lips, as I feel a joy within my soul that thrills me through and through.

By the prayers the children offer as each night they go to bed.

When the children go to bed at night, at once across the years my thoughts fly back to childhood, and my eyes are dim with tears.

My little ones are now, as I recall when I was staid as my little ones are now.

As in the golden morning of the fragrant years of yore.

So day by day I'm praising Him whose home is overhead.

For what my children teach me as each night they go to bed.

Turning the Tables. A young Pittsburgher, who has been drifting about the country for several years, had a novel experience in Arizona, which he is telling to his friends.

While working his way across that state he ran out of funds, and for want of something better secured work as a bartender in a small saloon.

"Bright, naturally," the young chap became an adept at his new profession and things went well for a time.

"Mix me up a strong drink, extra strong," said the cowboy. The young Pittsburgher mixed in a high glass the worst concoction possible, and added to the flavoring of this with a large amount of pepper of the hottest sort.

BIBLE STILL BEST SELLER.

Last Year American Bible Society Sold 2,826,831 Volumes.

The newspapers have lately made note of the fact that amidst the flood of new books the Bible still stands forth as "the best seller." An experienced publisher once remarked: "Books are not bought, they are sold."

Another reason is the number of agents canvassing the world, eight hundred in all, three-fourths of them in foreign lands. The third reason is the fact that the business is not carried on as a self-sustaining business.

The total number thus circulated during a century of active effort is immense—no less than 300,000,000 copies of the American and the British society together, besides the output of many business houses at higher prices.

No other book has made any approach to such a record—the one book destined to flood the world with the rise of the Bible societies a century ago came close after the rise of the missionary societies, home and foreign.

Seed is not more needful for the farmer than the Bible in the tongue of the people is for the missionary.

China last year took of the American Bible Society's issues 372,477 volumes more than the year before.

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.

Primate Climbed to Summit to Place Last Pinnacle.

Another interesting stage in the reparation of the towers of Canterbury cathedral was reached recently when the primate climbed to the summit of the north-west tower and fixed in position the last of the four pinnacles.

The dean and chapter, whose incomes are now only three-quarters of their nominal value, personally contributed £1,500 of the £15,000 expended on the central tower, and no sooner had this arduous four years' work been accomplished than the chapter were warned by their architect, W. D. Caroe, F.S.A., that considerable parts of the two western towers were in a dangerous condition.

Although the pinnacles are now complete, a sum of £2,000 has to be collected, so that the scaffold can be moved on to the south-west tower adjoining the upper parts of which are in a decrepit state.

The ceremony yesterday opened with a short service high up on the roof of the cathedral. Dean Waco having given a description of the works completed and in progress, the archbishop commended the manner in which the reparation had been carried out.

Some thousands of pounds more were required to complete the work now in hand, he said, and their appeal, he trusted, would meet an adequate response.

He prayed that the blessing of God might continue to rest upon all that was done for the preservation of their great central shrine—a monument as important in its relation to English history as in its practical work for the benefit of the church and people in the land, to-day.

The primate then ascended the platform by the pinnacles and fixed the coping stone. His grace also helped to fix a rod by which the masonry is braced together. The hymn, "O God, Our Help In Ages Past," was sung.—London Standard, December 31st.

Helping the Blind.

The wind was blowing a bit more than a gale last night when a benevolent old chap stopped to put a dime in the hat of a shivering blind man on the public square.

The donor nearly dropped the coin, but the mendicant bowed his hat underneath it and skillfully rescued it.

"Why, you're not blind?" cried the giver, scornfully. "No, sir," confessed the beggar. "I'm just takin' a pal's place while he has a bit o' rest. He's blind, sir—been blind from birth."

"Where is he taking his rest?" demanded the stranger, still unconvinced. "Why, he er—why, he's gone to a movin' picture show."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Well Paid Evangelist.

The Rev. "Billy" Sunday conducted a revival six weeks in duration at Waterloo, Iowa; he received for his services $8,400. Henry E. Burgess, of Mercer, Ill., has been compiling statistics that twenty-seven of the fifty-five towns in which he has conducted services since 1900 have contributed to him $155,000. This is $15,500 a year and more than $5,700 from each community; if the twenty-eight towns whose contributions are not reported raised a beggarly thousand apiece the total income of the evangelist has been upwards of $18,000 a year for the decade.
