

Cured Chronic Kidney Trouble

A Severe Case That Had Baffled Other Kidney Remedies—Made Well and Strong by Using Warner's Safe Cure the world's best remedy for the kidneys, liver and bladder.

"We have great faith in Warner's Safe Cure, and would not be without it in the house. My husband had a severe case of chronic kidney trouble and had taken all kinds of kidney remedies, but without getting any benefit until he began using Warner's Safe Cure. Before he began taking it he could not work all day; but was obliged to come up to the house and lie down for a time. Now he is strong and well. Another member of our family was also entirely cured by its use." Mrs. F. A. Moore, R. F. D. 3, North Adams, Mass.

"So swift, silent and insidious is the all-prevalent scourge of kidney disease that it snuffs out more precious lives annually than all other diseases. Normal kidneys are rarely found in persons over forty years of age. The banker, the manufacturer, the doctor, the lawyer, the preacher, the rich and the poor alike suffer from this dread disease, and will find relief from the use of Warner's Safe Kidney Cure. It has done more for the prevention and cure of Bright's Disease and other kidney troubles than any known remedy. This is proven by its record for the past thirty-five years and the innumerable testimonials to that effect. Put up in 50c. and $1.00 sizes and sold by all druggists.

Warner's Safe Pills for constipation and biliousness are purely vegetable, sugar-coated, absolutely free from injurious substances, a perfect laxative. They do not grip or leave any bad after effects, 25 cents a package.

HER TARDY COMING

By STACY E. BAKER.

Cornelia Dean suddenly received a letter from John Oliver, answering pertinent questions that had been asked of him twenty years before.

Cornelia still a spinster—and a most comely one—was surprised, the yellowed pages, the faded ink, and the date line told her that the letter had been written on the day following her imperative demands, while the post office stamp showed that the letter had been mailed from Boston, but one day before.

Romance had long been dead in the heart of Cornelia Dean. She had loved John Oliver nobly and faithfully, and when he had passed out of her life as a lover, none other had come in. A flush on her pretty cheeks, the little lady carefully opened the letter and read, for the fifth time, its contents.

"My dearest! I have waited several days—and impatiently—for the letter you wanted me to read and answer before coming for your answer to my proposal—and now it is here.

"I know, dear, that I am practically a stranger to you and the good people of Sneedville, but in Boston, where, as you know, my father owns a large dry goods store, I am well known. My reputation in my own town will stand the test of investigation.

"Now, to answer your questions. "1. I do not touch liquor. Have never used intoxicants in my life. "2. No, if you consent to marry me we cannot live in Sneedville, but must make Boston our home, where I will eventually go into business with my father.

"3. I will give up smoking if you wish me to. "4. You know that I will always love you. There is no need to ask this. Ask, rather, your own heart. "Here, in great, lonely Boston, I am waiting a note bidding me to come to you. You will realize how lonely some I am, and you will answer at once. I am sure of this.

"Always yours, "JOHN OLIVER."

The ancient scroll fell to the lap of the little lady, and tears glistened in her eyes as her thoughts wandered away in reminiscent reverie. John Oliver! She could see him now, a stalwart, manly youth. He came to woo her, the most popular girl in Sneedville. She remembered herself as she looked then—a mere wisp of a girl, to be sure, but with that winsome prettiness that allowed her to pick and choose from the ranks of the best and most popular men in the city.

By The Wayside.

By RYAN WALKER.

I must look as nearly as possible like the girl he knew. Nothing that I have now will do. I must be more up-to-date; more like the girls of to-day. I am not so—so old, anyway, even if I do dress plainly. I haven't a gray hair in my head.

At last the day of her departure came, and the little suitcase was safely locked, the key hidden in a plant rack on the porch, and the more than pretty little lady on her way to the station.

The trip was a frightful one to the unsophisticated Cornelia, and a sigh of relief came to her lips when she found herself safely arrived in Boston—a larger city than she had imagined. She began to realize the hopelessness of her quest.

The address of his—John's—old home was burned indelibly on her brain. She called there after depositing her little baggage in a modest hotel. She found herself in front of a roofless domicile, the clapboards of which were being rapidly stripped from the scantlings. In consternation she stood on the idle second watching the workers reduce the building.

"Is there anything I can do for you?"

Inconsciously she had entered the gate slanting the lot of this building from the street. A man in the garb of a carpenter stood before her.

"I—!" Cornelia hesitated. "I was hunting for the residence of the Olivers. They used to live here, I believe?"

"Moved," lucidated the man, briefly. "This is the site of a skyscraper that the Olivers are having erected. This plot is too valuable for a residence to occupy. It's right in the heart of things, as you might say."

"But can you tell me where the—where John Oliver lives?"

LOVED ANOTHER.

The Judge—Here is your divorce, madam, and you are free to marry again—but as a matter of propriety I suggest that you wait awhile.

The Fair One—How long do you think I ought to wait?
Judge—A week.

"Moved," lucidated the man, briefly. "This is the site of a skyscraper that the Olivers are having erected. This plot is too valuable for a residence to occupy. It's right in the heart of things, as you might say."

"But can you tell me where the—where John Oliver lives?"

"With his parents, I believe; but as to that, I don't know. I don't even know where they have moved to. Young Mr. Oliver is here almost every day to see how the work progresses. Can I give him some message?"

"Tell him that Cornelia Dean was here."

"Cornelia Dean," repeated the man. "O—then you're the lady to whom the letter went?"

"What—what letter?" asked the puzzled Cornelia.

"One of my men found an old letter, sealed and addressed to you, under the tin roof of this house. Some one, while inspecting the timber, probably after the shingles were off, had dropped it, and the tin fitters covered it up without noticing. I mailed it."

"O," gasped Cornelia. "Here comes Mr. John Oliver now." The carpenter failed to notice the woman's embarrassment. A well-built man of about forty years of age approached. As he came nearer a puzzled look crept into his eyes, and then suddenly his pace quickened and he advanced, both hands outstretched.

TOO BAD.

"Was he a good preacher?"

"No. His sermon was stupid enough to make you sleepy, but his voice was loud enough to keep you awake."

"What do you think of the case against the Oil Trust?"

"Oh! just a flare up."

"My husband used GIN PILLS for Backache and Kidney Disease which formerly troubled him a great deal. The pain in his back was dreadful and the kidneys failed to do their work properly. As he became worse, we found it necessary to begin treatment and unfortunately wasted time and money on remedies that were little or no good. After taking one dose of GIN PILLS, he found them to be exactly what he needed, and after taking two boxes of GIN PILLS, was completely cured. We heartily recommend GIN PILLS at every opportunity to our friends and relatives."

THE PANEL AT THE BACK A NEW NOTE.

Straight down at the back of many of the new costumes hangs a panel, or two panels, in sash-end effect. The narrow skirted street suits have these panels stitched closely to the skirt almost to the bottom. On evening frocks the panel suggests a sash, or separate tunic, as in this frock of white satin over which is a tunic of black and white beaded chiffon. The satin skirt has a little square train and the straight panels also give a square effect, though the whole costume gives an effect of height and grace. With this black and white frock is worn a black velvet hat trimmed with a rich yellow Paradise plume.
