FOR RIGHT TYPE OF FEMALE IMMIGRANTS,

Who Locate in British Columbia, maketh a full man. There is a medi-Living.

"Undoubtedly there are excellent opportunities for the right type o emale immigrant in British Colum bia, but we have known of many disappointments owing to the ignorance of new arrivals as to the different conditions which prevail in the province, as compared with other parts, of Canada, particularly in regard to domestic service." This statement was made during an interview which a representative of Canada had with Mrs. Pemberton, of Victoria, and the Rev. Canon Beanlands, who was for so many years a prominent resident of the Pacific province.

It was pointed out that, while the Chinaman is extensively employed in domestic service in British Columbia, the native-born Canadian girl almost invariably seeks work in an office, a store, or a school, being able to pick Trains will leave and arrive at City and choose an occupation which, because it would give her the greatest amount of leisure time in the evenings, seems most to her taste. Another point dwelt upon was that in the towns of Canada those families. which are in a position to employ ... 7.00 p.m. 7.38 p.m. female domestic servants, expect ser-No. 8 Mail . . . . 1.40 a.m. 2.17 a.m. occasioned because the new-comer has vice as such, and not as lady-helps been led to believe that she will be treated as "one of the family." In other cases, girls have gone out who have been employed in those large establishments which are so numerons in the Old Country, and of which there are so few in Canada-rich men's houses where a number of servants are kept, each one having some defined duty to perform, which has made her either incompetent or unwilling to discharge the duties of a "general" servant.

> A common cause of mutual dissatisfaction between mistress and maid -in trivial matters almost amusing -is, however, the inadaptability of the newcomer to her different surroundings. Cases were quoted girls who have always used this that British polish, and could not be made to realize that a Canadian-made article-one with a name to which they were not accustomed-could perform the work. Occasionally, also, there is disappointment in the matter of wages, though as much as $15 a month may be paid to even the "raw" girl who really shows anxiety to learn and willingness to work. The opportunities for such a girl to rise and, frequently, to settle in a good home of her own, are, it was specially emphasized, much greater than in the older land In discussing the necessary expen> diture as compared with earnings, as to which so much difference of opinion has been expressed, it was stated that in British Columbia, without doubt, clothing is about 50 per cent. more costly, and the making of dresses by local dressmakers is probably twice as dear as in England. Cotton goods and underwear are, however, not any more expensive, but sometimes cheaper, than "at home." "The general impression," said Canon Beanlands, "is, I think, strongly favor of the higher wages as balance against the higher price of commodities; there is a larger margin for saving or spending."

As regards openings for school teachers, typists, or stenographers, and shops or office workers of any kind, the local supply is considered quite adequate to the demand. Another point drawn attention to was the entirely different conditions existing in cities like Vancouver or Victoria from those in the country disricts on the mainland or islands. Probably no province has so many people directly from the United Kingom engaged in fruit-farming, ranching, etc., who would welcome the right sort of female help in their homes, and would value the addi tion to the family of those who could join socially as well as helpfully in their circle, in fact, be true "lady

BRAVE BOYS IN BLUE.

Down East Doctor Has Written & Mysteries of the Festive Season In Courageous Constables Who Have Been Killed on Duty.

The recent tragedy in Houndsditch ecalls many similar examples of poice heroism in the face of terrible orkis, all going to show that the men in blue have never hesitated to risk their lives in the course of their duty. Constable Davey of Acton, so far as record shows, was the first policeman o be shot dead by a thief. Davey suspected a man named Brookes to be implicated in a certain robbery, and Brookes knew that Davey was on his track. Brookes called at Davey's wouse at night, and shot him down. In the seventies a policeman was shot at Whalley Range, near Manchester, and two brothers, named Habron, were accused, and sent to penal servitude for life. It was afterwards discovered that they were innocent, and that the real assassin was the notorious Charles Peace. Peace shot at and wounded P. C. Robinson in, his last exploit, before his daring career was brought to a close. Again, in 1881, P. C. Atkins surprised a gang burgling a house standing in its own grounds at Kingston, and was shot down. Up to the time of this affair burglars had rarely used revolvers, but now the practice became common, and, in the following year, P. C. Cole vas murdered at Dalston. The murderer was Orrock, a young man who was a member of the Baptist chapel he was breaking into when Cole came upon the scene, and was considered quite a model youth. But two years went over before justice was done, and hen Orrock was run to earth quite by

He had left his chisel behind him at the chapel, and on the blade was scratched the word "rock," and when, some months after the murder, a man named Orrock was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment for housebreaking, a detective got into conversation with one of Orrock's friends - also "doing time"-and learned something which brought the murder of Cole to his mind. The chisel was then examined under a microscope, and underneath the word "rock" was found another, which the microscopist made | Men's Rubbers, out to be "Orrick."

This was enough to hang the mur- Women's Rubbers, derer, and hanged he was accordingly. Following the murder of Cole, further regulations were made to enable the police to meet the new class of desperadoes on something like equal terms. Double patrols were arranged in certain places, constables were allowed to have revolvers when it appeared necessary, and whistles were

In the year of the Dalston murder there was a desperate affray in Hoxton. James Wright, a hardened villain, shot three policemen, wounding them severely. The case which followed over roofs of houses, where the ruffian kept his pursuers at bay with a revolver for more than two hours, forms one of the most exciting erisodes in police annals.

Inspector Simmons, of the Essex Constabulary, the following January, was shot at Romford by one of three men whom he had been watching. His murderer, James Lee, was tracked owing to his stupidity in pledging his pistol at the pawnbroker's shop where he had previously pawned it.

One of the men with Lee was an ex-convict who had been concerned in shooting at two policemen in Gloucestershire, and another was a member of the gang who burgled Netherby Hall, Cumberland, and whose subsequent flight furnishes an intensely iramatic story.

The gang were pursued from place to place until they were run to earth. twenty-four hours afterwards, and captured, fighting desperately. During their flight they shot four policemen, wounding three, and killing one

Then, in July, 1885, there occurred a terrific fight between a young constable and a masked burglar, whom he surprised on the roof of a house who has designed the four-horse war | in Kensington. Four shots were fired at the officer, who was subsequently found insensible. Holland, another constable, was assailed by three burglars in St. Marylebone Churchyard, in August, 1886, and was shot in the

Then the doctor ordered him complete rest. "T.P." rested for two days: then he got restless, wrote a long magazine article, delivered two speeches, each of nearly one hour's duration, and afterwards wrote another short article, which he posted himself between one and two o'clock in the morning. Mr. O'Connor writes everything with his own hands on a typewriter. He has one machine in his library and another by the side of his bed, and each typewriter lasts him little more than
