FAVOR RECIPROCIITY

FRONTENAC FARMERS ARE STRONG FOR IT.

They Regard Their Own Prosperity as More Important Than Mere Allegiance to Political Party.

On Saturday morning, Whig representatives interviewed a number of representative farmers on the market regarding their views on the reciprocity agreement before the Canadian Commons. Very few were found opposed to it, the great majority, irrespective of politics, declaring themselves strongly in favor of any trade arrangement that would increase their prosperity.

"Yes, I am in favor of reciprocity," said John Quinn, of Barriefield. "I am satisfied it will benefit the farmers. The talk of annexation is nonsense. My opinion is that the more prosperous a man is, the more loyal he will be. A little bit of reciprocity will not injure our loyalty."

Joshua Knight, of Kingston township, said: "You can say that I am in favor of reciprocity three times a day. Reciprocity in natural products is just the thing we need."

Thomas Smith, another Kingston township farmer, also expressed himself in favor of reciprocity. He could see no reason for opposing it. Alexander Grant, of Pittserry, remarked that the matter seemed to be a political fight, but all the same he was out for his own and his neighbors' interests before party. He was certainly in favor of the agreement that would bring more money to the farmers of Frontenac.

T. A. Barnes, of Dufferin, expressed a similar view. He had decided that reciprocity on farm products would benefit Frontenac and therefore he supported it.

Daniel Ahearn, Cusheendall, was one of the younger farmers found in favor of the reciprocity measure. He agreed with Mr. Quinn, of Barriefield, that the loyalty of the farmers would be rather increased by a fuller pocket.

William Milton, of Eric, was found inclined to support the measure, as he agreed that it would bring better farm produce prices to the county. He said that his brother, Daniel Milton, was in favor of reciprocity.

J. H. Millious, of Pittserry, declared himself strongly in favor of the agreement. He could see brighter days ahead for the farmers when some of their produce could go across the line free of duty.

Joseph Keenan, a well-known and well-to-do Glenburnie farmer, said he was out for reciprocity for all he was worth. He believed it was for the good of the country in general. "Of course," he said, "there are a few things that it will hit us on, but the majority it will benefit. It is a question that the farmers nearly all take the same stand on. They want it and will do all in their power to get it. I think it is purely a political struggle. Take that deputation that went from Niagara and St. Catharines. They are the only ones who are opposed to it. They value their land at $100 an acre. Our land here, equally as good, is only valued at about $40. Why should we build a fence around this to shield them from what this pact will do, and expose ourselves. Yes, sir, I am out for reciprocity all the time."

"I don't wonder the manufacturers are out strong against reciprocity. It is in their interest." This is the way Arthur Spooner, a young farmer, belonging to Glenburnie, expressed himself when spoken to by a Whig representative. "I am in favor of it and I hope to see it go through. Of course my opinion counts for very little, but I think the men who are at the head of the government are looking at it from the right standpoint. We want this thing and we are looking to the member of this constituency to assist us in putting it through."

"Give us reciprocity by all means," said A. Knight, one of the best-known market gardeners in this district. "I think it will be a good thing for the country, and we should give it every support."

Reeve Richard Baiden, Portsmouth, a gardener, was strongly in favor of reciprocity. "You can put me down as being favorable to it, and I do hope that it will be carried out. I think the country will benefit by it, and am in favor of anything which I think will help the country."

James F. Knapp, at present immigration agent, but for many years a farmer, strongly favored reciprocity, and said that from the farmers' standpoint they had everything to gain. He hoped to see it carried out.

James Baxter, Barriefield, said he did not know of a farmer in his vicinity, who was against reciprocity. "A farmer who is not in favor of reciprocity has no right to the name of farmer," he said. Mr. Baxter hoped the reciprocity agreement would be put through.

J. Woodruff, a well-known buyer of cattle, said he was not in favor of reciprocity. His reason was that he thought we should leave well enough alone. Prices had been good and he did not think that any change should be made.

David Smith, Pittserry farmer, said that he would be in favor of free trade between Canada and the States. One of the farmers who expressed his opinion, told a good story in connection with reciprocity. He told how for many years, there had been a cry for reciprocity, and now when it could be secured, there were people who opposed it, and said it was not needed. It reminded him of the farmer who had money in the bank. He became rather uneasy about his cash, having the opinion that perhaps the bank was not just as safe as it might be, and that he stood a chance of losing it. He went to the bank one day, while he was complaining, the bank offered him his money, but he refused to take it. He had been crying out for it, and then when he had the chance to take it, he did not want it. Just so with the question of reciprocity. For many years, an effort had been made to get a reciprocity agreement. Now it could be secured, these same people were opposed to it.

No change since we were boys. That oft-quoted proof of those ne'er-to-be-forgotten puddings is still, as of yore, not in reading the recipe, but in your friend, attempts to tell you "it doesn't stand to reason," and about all the "other things you must learn," etc., etc., the real, reliable evidence of your ability to qualify as a stenographer with 25 to 35 days' study is not in argument, or theorizing, but in thousands of real living men and women, who have done it and are to-day holding splendid positions in the face of keen competition. Get catalogue and free lessons may interest you and a few hundred names of local graduates or employers may convince you. Mon. College, 282-286 Yonge street, Toronto.
