A TALK WITH BRYCE

WHIG REPRESENTATIVE SAW HIM IN OTTAWA.

His Canton Recalled to Mind the Late Principal Grant—Thinks Too Many People are Leaving Scotland.

Ottawa, May 4.—The Whig's Ottawa representative last night at Government House had an interview with the Right Hon. James Bryce, British ambassador to the United States. He is just the canny, cautious Scotchman and diplomat that he showed himself to be when interviewed here before.

Anything that Dr. Bryce does not want to tell newspaper men about he is not going to, and in this respect he reminded the Whig man of the late Principal Grant, of Queen's University.

He talked at some length regarding international arbitration, its practicability, the progress being made regarding it, its importance to Britain and the States, and what President Taft is doing, and the late King Edward did towards it.

Of course, regarding politics the ambassador is always mum, and Whig readers can decidedly assume that he remains on the reciprocity issue a political one.

"That is politics," said the ambassador, when asked what he had to say about reciprocity. He refused to discuss this subject, merely referring to the fact that in the United States he understood the matter was not so much a party question as it was in Canada. In the former country, parties had become divided on the question in certain instances.

Dr. Bryce, a loyal son of the heather, expressed the belief, or rather fact, that too many Scotchmen were leaving their native land, though he added, "Of course, if they are bound to leave Scotland, I'd rather see them come to Canada than in any other place; but I am afraid Scotland cannot spare very many of her people. Scotland has not a large population, and a friend of mine intimates to me that a good many are leaving for Canada."

Asked what he was here for, the ambassador judiciously said he was just on hand to talk over interesting questions with his old friend, Earl Grey; recalled that he and the governor-general entered the British parliament together, thirty-one years ago; that they traveled together out to western North America with a large party in 1882; and that he is not surprised he has become so generally popular since his appointment as the king's representative in the Dominion.

The author of the "American Commonwealth" is as keen and observant as ever. He can sign more letters after his name than probably any man outside of royalties in the British empire, yet he was not too busy last evening to redeem a promise and talk to a little group of newspaper men who saw him. He and Mrs. Bryce will remain here for two or three days.

What the Doctors Found.

Montreal Gazette. A commission under Dr. Hodgetts has found that the recent outbreak of typhoid fever in Ottawa was due to the pollution of the water supply. This should have been prevented. It was also in part the consequence of the municipal authorities having ignored the recommendations of the city engineer. There were other contributory causes, including preventable insanitary conditions and defective plumbing. After being advised, also, the city council neglected to provide for the hypochloride treatment of the water which, it is held, would have checked the disease. The indictment is a long and rather severe one. It suggests that the city council which looks after the safety, municipal comfort and health of a modern city has work equal to its powers and does not need to teach out for others in order that it may show its usefulness.

Donkey Obstacle Race.

New York Tribune. Writing about the visit of the German crown princess to Egypt, a Boston Post correspondent says: "Europeans who come here, no matter how devoted they are to the automobile, must become riders of donkeys, and it was easy to find contestants for the donkey obstacle race arranged for the royal lady's entertainment. One of the obstacles consisted of five empty barrels set about two feet apart. The rider was expected to wind in and out between these barrels mounted on a mule and leading a second animal of the same uncertain disposition. One of the ladies accomplished the task. And the donkey had much fun."

Urging Abolishing of Hanging.

New York Tribune. There is a pretty general demand in the press of Pennsylvania that the legislature at the present session amend the law relative to the death penalty by abolishing hanging and providing for executions by electricity, following the example of New York, Massachusetts and New Jersey. Commenting on a recent execution the Pittsburgh Dispatch says the fact that "the murderer's life was not extinct for fifteen minutes after the drop ought to make that the hanging in Allegheny county by assuring, through aroused public sentiment, the enactment of the electrocution bill."

That Tired Feeling

that is caused by impure, impoverished blood or low, run-down condition of the system, is burdensome and discouraging. Do not put up with it a day longer, but take Hood's Sarsaparilla, which removes it as no other medicine does.

"I was fast approaching a nervous collapse when a friend advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, for it did her worlds of good. I bought a bottle and after taking it I felt better. I gained ten pounds. I took two more bottles and that tired feeling was gone, and all my friends remarked how much improved I was." MAY H. DAVIDSON, Orangeville, Ont.

There is no real substitute for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Any preparation said to be "just as good" is inferior, costs less to make and yields the dealer a larger profit.

Sir Richard Webster and Athletics.

Sir Richard Webster, Chief Justice of England, was, in his youth, a famous athlete, and on many occasions, carried the colors of his college to victory. His forte lay in distance running—from a half-mile upwards—and besides undoubted endurance, he had a fine turn of speed, according to the chronicler of the time, who described him as "finishing in gallant style with a fine spirit." Sir Richard seldom misses an important meeting, or athletic function of any kind, and is much sought after, because of his well-known enthusiasm, and the influence a word of encouragement from a man in his position is bound to have.

It is indeed noticeable the number of prominent men in England who were noted athletes in their college days, and goes to disprove the contention that participation in athletics militates against the success of a man in after life. The reverse is often the case, and that should be the true object and purport of them.

Dom Manuel's Scraggy Dog.

Two ladies walking in Richmond Park, London, recently were horrified to have the little black and white terrier that accompanied them suddenly set upon by a fierce and very much in earnest bulldog. The ladies shrieked and the master of the bulldog appeared at once and proceeded to separate the combatants, using a whip freely and pulling his dog away from the straggling animal.

When the terrier had been restored to his owner the young gentleman raised his hat and apologized humbly for the trouble his dog had caused and expressed the hope that the little terrier would not suffer from his rough treatment and that the ladies would recover from their alarm.

Whereupon the two ladies discovered that the pallid young man who was so very courteous was none other than the dethroned King of Portugal, Dom Manuel, who was taking his customary morning stroll in the park.

Rufus Isaacs' Sacrifice.

It is doubtful if any lawyer of our times, not even excepting Sir Edward Carson, has derived a bigger income from the legal profession than Sir Rufus Isaacs, the British Attorney-General. Some idea of the value placed upon his services may be gathered from the fact that in a case in which he was leading counsel three years ago, which lasted twenty-one days, Sir Rufus received a retaining fee of $15,000 and a refresher of $1,000 a day.

In accepting the office of Attorney-General Sir Rufus made a big sacrifice. A salary of $35,000 is attached to the office, which, together with fees, totals somewhere about $50,000. It is estimated that Sir Rufus' private legal practice was bringing him in over $150,000 a year.

Who Won?

The late Duke of Wellington got a letter once from a lady, saying she was soliciting subscriptions for a certain church, and had taken the liberty to put his name down for $1,000, and hoped he would promptly send her a check for the amount. He forthwith replied that he would respond to the call; but he, too, was interested in a certain church which needed subscriptions, and, counting upon his correspondent's well-known liberality, he had put her down for $1,000. "And so," he concluded, "no money need pass between us."—The Christian Register.
