THIS WOMAN A DEAR

SHE CAN MAKE A DRESS FOR A DOLLAR

And a Hat for the Same Amount
Kingston Men May Invite Her to Give a Lecture Here.

The married men of Kingston are thinking of inviting Mrs. A. F. Healey of Sandwich, Ont., to this city to explain to the women how to make three hats and three dresses for the sum of three dollars. Mrs. Healey is the wife of a lawyer, and has been confiding to her friends the actual cost of some of the gowns that have appealed to them as very neat, well-fitting and dressy. One friend recently expressed admiration for one of her gowns, and asked where she had it made.

"I made it myself, and it cost me only a dollar, including the hat," she replied.

Here is how Mrs. Healey did the trick:—"In the first place I took advantage of the January remnant sales, and bought all the material which was a lovely Russian crash, thirty-six inches wide in three shades, at eight cents a yard. It is a simple Princess gown made in two shades of violet, crash, the deeper forming front and back panels, sleeve caps and ruffles with ribbon ties.

The hat of one bolt of straw braid cost five cents. As I went along I just worked in the shape to resemble the Turkish, and strengthened the lower edge, with a strong hat wire. The feathers are three years old and so I consider that I have got my money's worth out of them long ago. They are in two shades of violet, too, and cost originally $2.95 a piece.

This is the actual cost of one of the outfits shown by Mrs. Healey:—
7 yards red Russian crash at 8c., 56 cents.
2½ yards 5-in wide insertion, at 10c., 25 cents.

1 bolt red straw braid at 25c., 25 cents.
Total amount, 98 cents.

"The last and perhaps the prettiest is my blue gown made with the new peasant sleeve, the rather short waist, deep hip yoke and pleated skirt. This remnant happened to come in seventeen yard length, and as I intended to have a pretty full skirt it took the whole piece. I used a yard of the prettiest white linen embroidery for finishing the neck and sleeves; otherwise the dress is very simple.

"The hat I made on the Hindoo order only a trifle wider as I did not want it to look like me lavender fez. The pearl ornament used on this is really my hair bandage (that I had used all winter at parties) which I just tacked across the front and stuck a gasoline cleaned cigarette up the side."

The actual cost given by Mrs. Healey for this outfit is:—
7 yards blue Russian crash, at 8c., 56 cents.
1 yard white embroidery, at 20c., 20 cents.

1 bolt blue straw braid, at 25c., 25 cents.
Total amount, $1.01.

"I must not forget to tell you I had too much material for the last gown after all so made a dear of a Russian blouse coat for my little daughter out of what was left over. Isn't it cute?" added Mrs. Healey.

SHE HAILED FROM FERMOY.

Story of a Faithless Wife Who Suicided.

Mrs. Elizabeth L. Hartman, of Rodman, N.Y., who committed suicide by drinking chloroform belonged to Fermy, Bedford township of Frontenac County. She was born there twenty-seven years ago, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Lewis. On June 13th, 1903, she was united in marriage in Watertown, N.Y., to Mr. Hartman, who was then employed in a paper mill in Brownsville. They were to live in Brownsville, remaining there for five years, and then going to the town of Rodman, to operate a farm about two miles from Rodman village. Two children were born there.

When her husband was ill of pneumonia in February last, Mrs. Hartman clung with Bernard Priest, a neighbor. She returned some time later but was told by her husband that he did not want her. While Hartman was in hospital in Watertown, in March, he commenced proceedings for a divorce from his wife. The papers had not been served on her, as her whereabouts were unknown.

The woman is survived by her parents, four brothers, Henry Lewis, of the Canadian North-West, and William Melvin and Adelbert of Fermy, and two sisters, Mrs. Anna Lewis, of Fermy. On hearing of his wife's death Mr. Hartman said: "I don't owe her anything, but I will see that she does not have a pauper's burial. I have telegraphed to her father in Canada. He will be here Friday night. If he doesn't pay the funeral expenses, I will pay them myself."

ENGAGEMENT BROKEN.

Statement Comes as a Surprise to Friends.

The Syracuse Post-Standard says: "The engagement of Miss Florence Bresce of this city and Dr. Roy K. Lillie of Westport, Ont., has been broken. They were to have been married on June 20th."

When it became known among Miss Bresce's friends that she was not to become the wife of Dr. Lillie they were much surprised. She has been entertained in many Syracuse homes during the past few weeks as one of the young brides, and there have been numerous showers in her honor.

Miss Bresce is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen K. Bresce of Spring View Farm, just west of East Syracuse, on the James street road. Dr. Lillie is a young dentist at Westport. He was in Syracuse on Sunday.

Announcement was made at the Bresce home, yesterday, that the wedding had been indefinitely postponed. No reason was given. Mrs. Bresce and her daughter reluctantly admitted that the engagement had been broken.

A request was made that nothing be said further than that the wedding had been indefinitely postponed.

When asked if his daughter was going to marry some one else, Mrs. Bresce answered: "I hope Florence will be married before she is 100. There will be another announcement later. I do not care to say anything about it now. That is our business for the present."

Both Mrs. Bresce and Miss Bresce hasti to make known what had been the reason for breaking the engagement.

MAKES HENS LAY.

"Cackling" Phonograph Used by Farmer—Other Contrivances.

Premerton, Wash., May 20.—O. L. Oliver is a believer in auto suggestion, and is turning his beliefs to commercial profits by applying them to poultry raising. Two hours each day, one in the morning and one in the afternoon, Ms. Oliver shuts himself in a dark room on his ranch, north of town, and concentrates his thoughts on his flock of hens, mentally willing that they be imbued with the desire to lay eggs.

The idea of suggestion is carried out in the hen coop. About the walls are hung attractive oil paintings, done by an artist, of nests full of eggs. The idea is for the salvation of the boys.

It is the city not good for an enterprise of this sort?"

The above paragraph is quoted from the editorial columns of the Daily British Whig, bearing the date of May 11th. On the same evening the Y.W.C.A. seriously considered the advisability of appealing to the public for four thousand dollars for the purpose of erecting a gymnasium more efficient in saving the girls of the city, but left the matter over because it was feared it would not receive the support it deserved. On the shades of night begin to fall three hymns are played by the phonograph. These have a soothing effect on the hen minds. Mr. Oliver asserts, that it could not ask the citizens of Kingston for a paltry five hundred dollars to provide a temporary shelter for the wives and strays—the neglected, dependent, ill-treated, children, who are falling or being deliberately led into vicious and downward ways.

Why, this timidity? Why this dread of failure for so good a cause? Why do these workers say by their actions, "The city of Kingston is not good for an enterprise of this sort?"

The citizens of Kingston are as charitable and generous as the people of any other city. They are quite anxious to save the boys and girls as people anywhere else can be. Some of our citizens are complaining about the lack of confidence shown by these organizations in the generosity and good-will of the public.

Personally, I believe that every good work will be heartily supported the moment it is seen to be good and necessary. Let us see.

Juvenal said: "The man's character is made at seven; what he is then he will always be." Of course, later environment will modify the influences of early life, but the percentage of men and women whose course is altered after sixteen years of age is very small. Ruskin affirmed: "The true history of a nation is not of its wars, but of its households." The state owes a duty to every child to see that it is well housed, fed, clothed and educated as long as it is a child. No child ought to be left where it is ill-treated or abused physically, mentally or morally. The city can find plenty of money to erect monuments to soldiers who have been slain in a war in the most distant part of Africa; it can honor in similar manner statesmen who have served our country well. Is it to be said, even indirectly, that it cannot furnish the means whereby its poorest children may have a fair chance to become good citizens instead of criminals? Most emphatically we answer, No.

The work of making good citizens must begin at the bottom; it must influence the earliest years. Crime cannot be prevented by punishment; it can only be prevented by letting no child grow up a criminal. This is the special work which the Children's Aid Society undertakes to do. It aims to save the neglected, and-faced, prematurely old, weary-eyed little ones from the purloins of vice and crime by taking them out of the hot-beds of wrong-doing and placing them in the pure, moral atmosphere of good homes. It is impossible to estimate in money the value of this work to the city. But it cannot be adequately done without a shelter. Is it possible that five hundred dollars can not be raised for a good work?

A child who commits a crime must be arrested. Shall we put a child in the police cells or in the jail? Two boys have already been there recently because there was no other place in which to detain them until they could be sent to the Industrial schools. There are others, both boys and girls, who should be apprehended, but we cannot shut them in the cells even for a night. Humanity rebels against the thought. Children are not criminals; they are delinquents. We want to win them to better ways. A shelter, with a proper, homelike detention-room, is absolutely necessary if the ends of humanity are to be served. Will anyone say that even a thousand dollars cannot be raised for this worthy purpose? Will not some good friend of the children start a fund for this purpose by sending a subscription to the treasures of the society, Merchants' Bank?—J. C. MCNAULIE.

BOY KILLS 67 SNAKES.

Digging in Hill He Unearths Big Nest.

New Richmond, Wis., May 20.—Leo Norton, aged fourteen years, has been spending his vacation at the home of his uncle, P. J. McIntyre, a farmer in Warren.

Digging up an ant hill, he brought to light two large black snakes. He continued prospecting, with the result that there eventually wriggled out of that hole sixty-seven snakes, three or four at a time and ranging in length from twelve to eighteen inches.

The boy killed them all with his hands as fast as they appeared.

ALBERTA PROVINCE SUED

TOO MUCH TIMIDITY
