The coronation ring of pure gold, with a magnificent ruby carved with a St. George's cross, and surrounded. by diamonds, typifies the marriage of the savereign to his people, and has been peetically called "England's wedding ring." The anointing with oil is traced back to the setting apart of the first King of Israel. The ampulla, the vessel of pure gold in which the consecrated oil is contained, is in the shape of an eagle with outstretched wings, the oil being poured out of its beak. The spoon into which it' is poured is of silver. richly gilt, and adorned on the handie with four large pearls. These two articles, it is interesting to note, are supposed to be the sole relics of the original regalia of England demolished by the ruthless Cromwell at the time of the Civil War.

The existing emblems were made on the old mode's for the coronation of Charles II. The curtana, or sword of Mercy, is the principal one in dignity of the three which are carried nsheathed before the King. If has Ino point, its blunted blade being a token of mercy. The sword of Justice to the Spirituality, is pointed, but somewhat obtuse; and the sword of Justice to the Temporality is sharp pointed. The scabbards of all three are covered with a rich brocaded sisue of cloth and studded with gilt two-handed weapon, with a scabbard of crimson velvet, decorated with gold plates of the toyal badges. The orb, the symbol of dominion which is placed in the King's hand immediately before the erowning, is surmounted by a fine amethyst, which forms the pedestal of a cross of gold studded with precious stones. The right of holding the orb is the sole prerogative of reigning kings and queens, a custom adopted by the early Saxon sovereigns from the Roman emperors. An amusing story is told of the late Queen Victoria, who, it would seem, was not duly impressed by this great privilege. When Lord John Thynne, who was acting for the Dean of Westminster at her coronation, presented the orb to the Queen, she asked: "What am I to do with it?" "Your Majesty is to earry it, if you please, in your hand."
