Ald. Elliott made quite a lengthy address on the subject. He drew the attention of the aldermen, to an 'article in the Standard. He regarded the mayor, as the father of the said article, which referred to the fact that a certain citizen had only paid seventy statement which had been published, helpless than anywhere else, as had taken the first man on the list, cerned. A certain amount was necessary to pay for the fixed charges. If there was no raise the price of gas, and would this He Says: fee, then the council would have to b? fair? This he regarded as bad financing.

Continuing in his argument, Ald. Elliott said every precaution should be taken to keep the plant in a safe condition, to look after its welfare for the next twenty-five or forty years, and after that time, to take off the rentals, if it could be done. Kingston, at the present time, was getting gas at the fourth lowest price in the province of Ontario. With gas selling at one dollar, per thousand, and $2 per annum for rental of meter, the citizens were doing well, he considered.

"How does Kingston compare with other cities ?" asked Ald. Hong. Ald. Elliott explained that Kingston compared favorably with other places.
