everywhere greeted with cheers and cries of loyalty. St. James street and Piccadilly, where the procession passed under floral arches, were thronged to their limit, and although people had waited here for the whole day without seeing anything of the show, they were not too tired to add a noisy welcome to those that had preceded it.

Around Hyde Park corner the general public had found some room, and they stood here from early morning to give their majesties a parting God-speed as they passed through the arch at the head of Constitution Hill on their way home to the palace.

Those who still waited after the gold coach had passed into the yard of Buckingham palace were rewarded as the king and queen appeared on the balcony, just as they had left the Abbey, with their crowns on, and bowed to right and left.

QUEEN STOOD THE IDEAL CALMLY. When it came to the time to place the crown on the king's head, the Archbishop of Canterbury, who, it was feared for a time, would be overcome and unable to perform the service, showed little perturbation, though his hands trembled visibly.

BURGLARS IN A HOME. Entered Residence of Late Dr. C. L. Curtis.

Evidence goes to show that burglars paid a visit to the home of the late Dr. C. L. Curtis, King street, on Wednesday night. However, an inspection of the place shows that the burglars got nothing for their trouble, and it is believed that they were frightened off before they had time to get their booty.

When the members of the household retired, all the doors were locked, but in the morning the side door was found to be unlocked, showing that it had been opened with a key.
