PICKED THE RICH PLACE. Vancouver Man Forecasted the Wealth of the Canadian Yukon.

Belief has been general that the discovery of gold in the Yukon district of Canada was the result of an accident, as in the case in most great finds in mineral.

The story of John McDougall, of Vancouver, shows that the finding of gold at Dawson was the outcome of observation, following a working out of gold location theories in the Cariboo district of British Columbia.

On the same boat was William S. Lansing, a prospector from Montana, who had gone north in 1885 and had struck gold up the Stewart River.

McDougall was more interested than ever. He got Lansing to draw on the billiard table in the Occidental Hotel at Juneau a rough map of the Yukon River, with its tributaries.
