why the cost should be higher. Trustee Wallace did not believe that the labor trouble in the city had been the means of adding one extra cent to the cost of the new school. He had stated that the new school would cost double the amount expended on Frontenac school. The cost of building material had doubled, and if new tenders were called for, the price might still higher. He felt sure that they would not go lower. He believed that the board now had the rock bottom price for the work.

Trustee Bennett said that if mons Bros. were willing to do work at the price mentioned, 'they should have the contract. It would not be wise to call for new tenders. Too much time "had already been wasted. Cataraqui and Louise schools were practically the same as when he
