How Duke Bowers Got Rich.

Duke Bowers runs thirty-five grocery stores in Memphis and he believes in advertising.

About a week ago he filled four pages of a newspaper in his town with advertisements of his business, all devoted to sounding the praises of the groceries he had to sell.

It cost him as much to do this as it would have cost him to open another store, so he said; but he expects that his sales will increase so much that it will, in fact, not cost him a cent.

Since he began business in Memphis, Mr. Bowers says that he has spent more for newspaper space than he is worth, but he believes if he had spent only half as much for advertising he would not have been worth half as much as he is.

There is only one moral that can be drawn from this story—advertise! Some day, Mr. Bowers thinks, "everybody will be convinced that it pays to advertise."

Wanamaker found that out long ago. Every big and successful merchant in the country knows that it is true.

Every merchant in Richmond would find that it is true and the man who takes half a column would increase his space to half a page, and the half-page man would double up.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Saved by His Pride.

Although pride was not one of the cardinal virtues when he was a boy, he is still into her poor people, the settlement worker rejoiced when the strong man's wife informed her that the strong man had discontinued his regular Saturday afternoon pastime of battering his neighbors.

"How perfectly splendid," exclaimed the settlement worker, her face irradiated with the satisfaction of good deeds accomplished.

The fighter's wife, hearing the worker was taking to herself too much credit for the reformation, went on: "It's the way I manage him that does it. Up to midnight on Saturday I keep all his clean clothes locked up in a drawer that he can't get into, and since he has commenced to go to the mission he is too proud to take off his coat and fight with a dirty shirt on."—New York Times.

SPOKANE OPINION OF CANADA. NOT THE SAME OLD WORLD.

Everything Changed in the Last Half Century by the Scientists. It's queer but seemingly science knocks all the picturesque out of life, and if science were in a shooting gallery and the picturesque were a target, the ball would never stop ringing.

The old oaken bucket has given place to the galvanized iron vessel. The handle soldered on.

The moss-grown well curb is no more and over the well is a solid slab of cement, while in a bright red building a sizzling, thumping gasoline engine is industriously pumping the cool water into an elevated metal tank on stilts.

The plowman plods his weary way from the field. He rides back on the plow, which now has wheels.

The scissor grinder used to have a contraption made of wheels and wood and leather, and stood up and ground the things. Now he has an automobile, with a scissor grinder attached, and the auto power runs the thing.

The shoemaker used to want in a polished leather seat in his littered shop and cobble shoes while you sat with your cold feet on a newspaper.

Now you go into a miniature shoe factory, where they can make you a pair of shoes in the time it took him to put a heel on, and the buzz of machinery is only broken by the rattle of the cash register.

Where merchants used to put a gun or a mortar and pestle or something above their shops to show what they sold, the merchants now have recurring, alternating, hit-or-miss, come-and-go sort of electric signs that make you blind to gaze upon.

No more the seller of feather dusters and which brooms strolls about the streets with weird cries. You get these things at the store, and twenty-one seconds later a motorcycle youth delivers them.

No more the vendor of apples cries fiercely on the streets. Apples are now sold at a nickel apiece at the fruit stands, and the fruit has to be polished daily to keep it bright.

The hydrant has displaced the town pump; the barber shop is now a place where they do manicuring and give baths, no longer a lounging place for gossip.

It's all been changed by science, and scarcely a day passes that science doesn't take a pot shot at some picturesque phase of our earlier lives and knock the feathers out of its tail, for there's no room on this earth for both the scientific and the picturesque, and something had to go.—Galveston News.
