QUEER SCOTTISH LAW

DIFFERS IN MANY RESPECTS FROM ENGLISH CODE.

Law of Marriage Seems Very Loose, But It Is Made Almost Impossible For a Man to Deceive a Woman—Jurists Have Fifteen Members and Judges, Are Properly Senators of the College of Justice.

Very few people who have not either been brought up in Scotland or spent a considerable time in that country are aware how widely and fundamentally it differs in its system of jurisprudence from the remainder of the British Empire. The following facts—which by no means exhausts the subject—will prove of general interest, says Ideas:

It will be curious to learn that no marriage can legally take place in Scotland, whether by the sheriff, the minister of the Established Church or the humblest dissenting "Ranter," without the previous intervention of the registrar of marriages. Banns are not necessary, but only the Church of Scotland can validly publish them. When this method is followed, however, a certificate from the clerk of the parish session must be taken to the registrar certifying that the banns were duly published and no objections offered. Upon this the registrar issues the license—that is the legal authorization to the person—minister of any denomination—who is to perform the ceremony, and with it a document to be filled up and returned to the registry. To conclude this section, if any number—say a dozen—of people form themselves into a congregation—say—New Episcopals, appointing a bishop and presbytery, and on a piece of film by artificial light, and when the desired number of titles to each part of film has been reached the artificial light automatically goes out.

When these things are completed a positive has to be taken in the same way as an ordinary photograph. This is done by placing an unexposed film together with the negative and printed by artificial light. The ray of light is made to fall directly on to the picture like the light that comes from a magnifying-glass being held to the sun.

Both films unroll themselves to gether, receiving the light on each individual picture. The negative film rolls itself up while the positive runs through the developing tank already described.

A full-length film is 1,000 feet, and contains no fewer than 16,000 pictures. The whole developing process for a film of this length takes about one hour and three-quarters.

Peer and Playwright.

"The Gods of the Mountain," the short play by Lord Dunsany which has been produced at the Haymarket Theatre, London, is not the first dramatic effort of this young peer, who is head of the great Irish family of Plunkett. He has several other plays and books to his credit, and, indeed, has acquired considerable reputation as a litterateur. As a soldier and sportsman, too, he has won distinction, and has proved himself a general host at Dunsany Castle, which is near Tara, famous in Irish song and story. Among his lordship's stock of stories is one concerning an old Irish woman, who, falling to receive from a large patent medicine firm a sample of pills for which she had applied, went to the postoffice to inquire why the letter (which she believed to have been posted) had not reached her. She was served with the customary form on which particulars of her grievance must be stated, after the words, "nature of complaint," she ingeniously wrote "biliousness."

The Poet Laureate.

An amusing story, which does not appear to be included in the recently published autobiography of Mr. Alfred Austin, the Poet Laureate, is told concerning one of his poems. This relates to the story of a duke who fell in love with a beautiful peasant maid, she refusing him because she loved a poet, whose face she had never seen. The story goes that Mr. Austin was once asked by an audacious friend whether a woman could really fall in love with a man whom she had never seen. The Poet Laureate replied, with a wave of his hand, "Possible? Why, it has happened to every poet. Often Mr. Austin, who is a Yorkshireman by birth, leads the simple life in Kent, his leisure being devoted to gardening and fishing."

Want to Buy a Workhouse?

The fact that there are 16,000 fewer paupers in London than there were exactly a year ago has led the Bethnal Green Guardians to abandon a branch workhouse, which is now up for sale or to let. Other Boards have vacancies in their institutions, Popular having over 2,000 fewer people to maintain out of the rates.

The City of London has had, for some time, a big workhouse to let or sell owing to the concentration in another building of their diminishing pauper forces, which number only about 500. These institutions are rather hard to get rid of, for few private individuals can find a use for them, and London is already amply supplied with hospitals.

An Athletic Politician.

Sir H. Seymour King, who recently lost his seat for Central Hull, is a standing reputation of the argument that indulgence in athletics unfits a man for strenuous work in after life. He captained the "bush-house" cricket and football teams, and helped to win the University Football Challenge Cup for Oxford. Twenty-six years of Parliament and the responsibility of a great banking house, with branches in India as important as those in England, have not prevented his making himself his place on the roll of famous mountaineers and his name a household word among yachtsmen.

Don't be deceived. The man who talks against the empire may be ignorant of baseball rules. Paying pew rent will never purchase a passport. Ed Paradise, it adds to the minister's salary.

It often happens that the common people do things uncommon and worthy of merit. Trouble is one thing that cannot be sold by advertising, unless sold under a different name.

CORONATION PICTURES.

How the Picture Theatres Obtained the Views.

Thousands of Canadians are viewing the coronation procession at the electric theatres and are following the King and the Queen. Does anyone imagine the trouble and expense that it costs to produce these cinematograph films. Here is how the thing is done. The best places along the route were eagerly sought after by the various cinematograph companies, and the sites go naturally to the highest bidder.

How are these films taken and shown on the screen so quickly. It is largely a question of organization. Each company has a number of operators placed in various positions along the route, and directly one has exposed the film and taken part on a piece of film by artificial light, and when the desired number of titles to each part of film has been reached the artificial light automatically goes out.

When these things are completed a positive has to be taken in the same way as an ordinary photograph. This is done by placing an unexposed film together with the negative and printed by artificial light. The ray of light is made to fall directly on to the picture like the light that comes from a magnifying-glass being held to the sun.

POISONS THEIR HOBBY.

Curious Race in the Malay Forests is Expert in Death.

Away among the deep forests in the heart of the Malay Peninsula there dwells a singular people, whose curious habits are partially understood. An Italian explorer found them so interesting that he spent fifteen years in studying their habits and customs, and has some wonderful stories to relate about the Saca.

They live in a barbarous state, spending most of their time in gathering poisons from plants, which they prepare according to secret known only to themselves, for protection against their enemies and for bringing down their quarry in the chase.

But what proves most attractive to the natives is the great variety of poisonous plants. They speak about the different poisons as familiarly and as often as we speak about the weather, and the discovery of a new kind or combination is hailed as an event of the greatest importance.

The reason for this is because the poison is used in killing game and in poisoning plants. They speak about the different poisons as familiarly and as often as we speak about the weather, and the discovery of a new kind or combination is hailed as an event of the greatest importance.

BACK TO CHARLES I.

Historic Letter Recently Sold in London for a Big Sum.

A letter of Edmund Waller, the celebrated English poet, dated Paris, May 1643, addressed to John Evelyn, the diarist, and referring to Waller's banishment for participation in a plot to restore Charles I. to the throne, brought $470 at Sotheby's in London a few days ago. It is a full-page folio letter. In it Waller says:

"Yours of the 20th of April, together with your brother's, I received, assuring you that nothing could have made me wait so long, but the want of occasion to serve you; so that, contenting myself to hear weekly of you, in your's to Sir Richard, and to commend myself to your memory and the continuance of your favor, in his (which I hope he has not failed to do), I have spared to give you a worldly trouble . . . This enclosed I have sent concealed, because you, as well as he, should see the reasons why you were not so fully satisfied, in what he desired, at first, as now you are like to be."

"For your poor servant (since you do friendly invite me to trouble you) if you can see anything to any of your noble kinsmen or friends, in Parliament, to give me leave to return, to gather up the pieces of my wrecked fortune, as I desire."

Waller narrowly escaped having his head chopped off by Charles I.'s enemies. The fact that he was a cousin of John Hampden and by marriage a connection of Oliver Cromwell probably saved his life. In the conflict between King Charles and the Commons, he was at first enlisted on the side of the latter.

In February, 1643, he was one of the commissioners appointed to treat with the King at Oxford. Charles received him graciously, and it was during the poet's stay at Oxford that what was known as "Waller's Plot" was conceived. On his return to London he became the channel through which the adherents of Charles at Oxford communicated with his friends in London.

The edict of the plot was to secure that city for the King, to draw upon the defences, the magazine, and the tower, from which the Earl of Bath was to be liberated and made the general of Charles' forces. The king was to be informed of the hour of the rising and was to be, with a force of 3,000 men, within fifteen miles of London's walls.

One Roe, a clerk of Nathaniel Tomkins, brother-in-law of Waller, betrayed the conspirators. Tomkins and Richard Chaloner, a wealthy linen draper, were hanged in front of their own doors. Waller was fined $50,000 and banished to the realm. It was not until Nov. 27, 1651, that the House of Commons revoked his sentence of banishment, and ordered a pardon to be prepared for him. He was elected to Parliament in 1651, and remained a member until his death, Oct. 21, 1657. He became a member of the courts of Charles II. and James II.

King of British Shipping.

A fleet of no fewer than 22 steamers is controlled by Sir Owen Phillips. He is chairman of a number of shipping companies, including the Elder Dempster line, and the manager in which of late years he has engineered shipping deals, acquiring not single vessels, but whole fleets, furnishes a remarkable story of enterprise and energy. A short time ago, for instance, he arranged the purchase of the Pacific Steam Navigation Co., involving a million and a half sterling, the fleet comprising forty-four liners, while another purchase was the Morocco line, a favorite tourist service. Sir Owen is one of the famous trio of tall brothers who sat in Parliament together. He stands six feet seven inches in his stockings, while his brothers, Col. Ivor Phillips and Lord St. David, formerly Mr. Wynford Phillips, are six feet four inches and six feet three inches respectively.

Political Jeremiahs.

The following anecdote concerning the present Chancellor of the British Exchequer appears in Dr. Farquhar's "Reminiscences." Mr. Lloyd-George was speaking at a Liberal Re-chill, Surrey, of the unfulfilled prophecies and promises of a certain statesman, and quite accidentally he stretched his arm right over the head of Sir Jeremiah Colman, one of the local pillars of Liberalism, who was sitting close to him on the platform.

"We have had enough of those political Jeremiahs," he cried out. The audience rose to the joke and laughed and clapped vociferously. And, perhaps for the first time in his life, the little Welshman stood completely nonplussed, for it was not until the meeting was over that he found out where the humor had come in.

"The Simple Life Premier."

So Sir Wilfrid Laurier is known, for he is an early riser, practically a teetotaler, and is happier lurching on a bun and a glass of milk than on the most elaborate dainties. Sir Wilfrid Laurier's observation is so acute as to be almost uncanny. He never forgets a face or a voice. To the great delight of a page-boy, Sir Wilfrid recognized him as having been in a certain hotel when he last visited London. He speaks French like a cultured Parisian. Indeed, it was the first language he learned, not having lacked his native tongue till he was nearly twenty years old.

In and Out.

First Officer—Yes, we were marching over a plank bridge when it gave way, and the men fell in.

Second Officer—And what did you do?

First Officer—Oh, I ordered them to fall out!

A Woman and a Trunk.

Griggs—Weren't you surprised that the customs inspector didn't find those things you smuggled in? Briggs—Oh, no. My wife showed them away. She can pack things in a trunk where she can't even find them herself.

We're still able to carry ours in our vest pocket.
