THE MEANEST CRIME

BLACKMAILING IS RAMPANT THROUGHOUT LONDON.

The Evil Profession of the Man Who Extorts Hush Money Is One That Keeps an Army of Detectives Busy and Is the Despair of the Official Police—How Scoundrels Get Men Into Their Power.

"This is one of the worst crimes a man can commit. By threats and letters you have made a life a hell upon earth," Mr. Justice Lawrence, at the Old Bailey, London, England.

One of the most sensational blackmailing cases of recent years came to an end a few days ago, when Mr. Justice Lawrence, in passing sentence, made the remarks quoted. "The great pity of it is," said a well-known London solicitor, who has probably dealt with more cases of blackmail than any other member of the legal profession, to a newspaper man, "that for every one of these blackmailing scoundrels who are brought to book, a hundred escape scot free. These human parasites are of all classes. They feed upon the poor as well as the rich, and it is extremely difficult at times to know how to deal with them. Why? Because the victims are afraid to go to law. Men and women come to me and tell me that such and such a person is extorting money from them by threatening to expose some scandal connected with their lives. The extortion must be stopped," they say, "but it must be done quietly; otherwise there is a possibility of social ruin for them."

"Thus they tie my hands; and if I cannot settle the matter amicably with the blackmailer, I have to turn the tables on him or her by putting private detectives on their track, finding out all there is to be discovered about them, and endeavoring to make things so warm for them generally that they are glad to come to terms."

"But surely it is better to face the possibility of social ruin and exposure than to be hidden down and defaced by these despicable rogues?"

"Not always. The victim may be a married man or woman, with growing children just making their way in the world, and whose lives would probably be ruined by the exposure. The happiness of a woman may depend on hiding some secret sin from her lover or husband, or vice versa. The blackmailer knows this, and knows that he can bleed his victim to the uttermost without danger of being sent to prison."

And here the solicitor mentioned a case which he described as one of the saddest on record. A young woman, moving in very good circles, met a scoundrel at a seaside resort when she was quite a girl, and he persuaded her into a secret marriage. He treated her abominably for a few weeks, and then disappeared. For years the woman heard nothing of her husband. She thought he must be dead, and, meeting a man who really loved her, married him without disclosing her previous marriage. Suddenly her husband No. 1 turned up, and the plot to blackmail the unfortunate woman under the threat of disclosing her previous marriage and having her arrested for bigamy. For a year or two she kept him quiet with all the money she could get; but it was no good. He hounded her until, at last, in despair, she committed suicide. Afterwards her husband got an inkling of what had happened, consulted my informant, and thus the whole story came to light.

"It sounds like the plot of a modern novel," said the solicitor; "but I can assure you that it is an authentic case."

It is an astounding but nevertheless true fact that there is a restaurant in the West-end of London which is known to be the rendezvous of these blackmailers. Here they meet to discuss their villainous plans during the day, and in the evening they mix among the audiences at the music halls, theatres, hotels, and restaurants, looking for likely victims. They are well-dressed, plausible scoundrels, who quickly worm their way into the confidence of any person who gets into conversation with them. As a matter of fact, at the beginning of last year, Scotland Yard was in possession of certain information which left little doubt that a notorious gang of blackmailers, comprising then a couple of hundred men and women in all stations of life, was at work in the City and West-end and victimizing many people of high social standing. In England, on the racecourse, and at all the resorts of rank and fashion, the members of this gang were to be seen.

Perhaps the most dastardly trick played by these blackmailers is that of using one of the prettiest members of the gang as a decoy, getting a wealthy and prominent man into an entanglement with her, and then making him the petitioner in a threatened divorce case, the girl, of course, being married to one of the members of the blackmailing gang. It is estimated that their victims, rather than face divorce proceedings, which would result in social ruin, is willing to pay practically any price to keep the matter quiet.

"The extent to which blackmailing is carried on may be gauged from the enormous number of advertisements of private detectives published in the newspapers, in which they emphasize that they make a speciality of blackmailing cases.—London Tit, Bits.

Big Figures.

"My dear Miss Moneybags," said the impetuous young man, "I love you more than I can find words to tell."

"But I presume you could tell me in figures," rejoined the beautiful heiress in icy tones.

The man who weighs his words is never short-weight in talk. A lot of times thinking twice before you speak is not enough. If a girl meets a man who doesn't admire her she imagines that he is a confirmed man hater.

AN OLD CHURCH.

St. Andrew's, Niagara-on-the-Lake, Built 117 Years Ago.

St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Niagara-on-the-Lake, which celebrated its 117th anniversary recently, besides a record of longevity, has a history full of unusual incidents, and has been intimately connected with important national events. It is today one of the most interesting spots in the province.

During the war of 1812-14 the building was burned, in September, some months before the town was destroyed by the enemy, in December, 1813. The congregation met for some years in the schoolhouse, which was repaired for this purpose. In this building was held the first Sunday School in the town, all denominations taking part. The Minister, Bunker, the first teacher of the Grammar School, was the pastor at intervals from 1804 to 1817, preaching alternately there and at Stamford.

In 1830, a subscription for a new church was started, which reached £700, the building to cost £600. This is the solid brick structure now standing with old-fashioned, square pews and a high, handsome pulpit, perhaps the only one of the kind in the province.

The old church, though still in good preservation, has had many rude shocks to sustain. It was struck off by a tornado, twice struck by lightning. Its people have had many a struggle to maintain the house of God built by their fathers.

It was remarked that although on the north wall a tablet is placed with the words "The Minister's burying place," in all the hundred and seventy years, no minister of the church has died in the town, and the plot is empty, but for an infant of a day. St. Andrew's has never had a load of debt in the eighty years of the existence of the present church, and it was not intended to use the present occasion for raising money, but a summer resident with a generous heart asked if there was any debt, and being told the amount, $350, offered, if the congregation would raise half the amount he would provide the other half. A subscription was opened in the congregation, which was liberally and heartily responded to. Besides this the collection in the church was large, and the treasurer announced that over $500 was contributed in all.

The Eskimo Hunter.

The Eskimo method of hunting seals shows a primitive calling improved to a fine art. When a seal is discovered the direction of the wind is at once noted. Then the hunter, keeping himself to the leeward of the seal, walks up to within about a quarter of a mile of it. Beyond that he begins to scrouch and advances only when the seal's head is down.

Now, as the seal is one of the most wide-awake of animals and has the habit of throwing up its head quickly every few seconds to guard against danger, it follows that the Eskimo has to be extremely alert if he would get his seal. When the seal's head is down upon the ice its eyes are shut, and it is said that in these brief intervals it takes its sleep.

The hunter, by careful watching the seal's movements, is able with in about two hundred yards of it, but at closer quarters he is obliged to employ other tactics. He lies down at full length on the ice. Then the real sport begins.

When the seal's head is down the hunter, who keeps a keen eye on his prey, is able to approach still nearer by dragging himself forward on his elbows. This maneuvering continues for some time, the distance between man and beast has been reduced to a few yards.

When near enough to make a sure shot, the Eskimo takes his bow and arrow from his side and sends a swift shaft through the heart of his outwitted companion. Sometimes, instead of the bow and arrow, a harpoon is used with equal effect.

Valuable Concessions.

The far-sightedness of the old Hudson Bay factors in selecting land and posts at the most strategic points, is now reaping fruit for the company. One hundred acres selected at the Coppermine River, an enormous amount. It is interesting to review the condition under which the Hudson Bay Co. secured this land from the Dominion Government. A surrender dated July 15th, 1870, the Hudson Bay Co. relinquished all their rights in the Northwest. In lieu of this the Dominion Government gave them $1,500,000, and allowed them to select one-twentieth of all the surveyed land in the Northwest, south of Saskatchewan River at Edmonton, giving them 50 years in which to select this.

And forty years of the fifty-year term have elapsed, and the company have still many thousands of acres of this land to select.

In addition to the above grant, the company was allowed to select 100,000 acres around all its posts in the Northwest. This land was to be laid out and located within twelve months from the date of surrender. This means that the land around the post was to be selected by July, 1871.

Of the 100,000 acres, whether the company still have the right to select the balance, 4,840 acres, is a matter that is being now argued at Ottawa.

Montreal Harbor is Growing.

Figures furnished by the harbor commissioners show that since the opening of navigation until August 1, the commissioners' elevator handled 8,338,001 bushels of wheat. During the corresponding period of last year, the wheat handled amounted to 7,962,777 bushels.

TWO ROWING CELEBRITIES.

E. B. Butler and Jeff Taylor Promise to Do Big Things.

The present season has seen the Argonaut Rowing Club make the greatest clean-up ever accomplished by one organization in the history of local rowing, and possibly of local sport. The boys who wear the light and dark blue have carried off all the chief national and international championships of the continent, winning with equal ease at both St. Catharines and Saratoga, where the chief regattas took place. When it is all narrowed down, the two youths who stand most in the limelight are E. B. Butler, the sculler, and Jeff Taylor, the stroke of the senior crew.

It was said a few years ago that Ned Hanlan was Canada's best advertisement, and it now remains to be seen whether Butler will take his place. The sculler in the Diamond fellow, who likes to discuss his contests in a characteristically youthful manner. He came to the front as a sculler rather slowly, but always impressed those who saw him row with the fact that he was the makings of a man who could try for the Diamond Sculls. That will be his next venture. He outclasses all the scullers who have met him this year, as one fact indicates. It is one of the amateur rules of this sport that no contestant can be coached during a race, but at Saratoga the sculler in the Diamond boat forgot himself and started to tell one of Butler's opponents what to do. The Canadian stopped his craft and protested against such "unsportsmanlike" conduct. Then dipped his oars in again and won the race.

Jeff Taylor is a liner-all-round sport than Butler as he also shines in kayak, and it might be legitimately added that he sings in the National Chorus. He made his appearance on the horizon several seasons ago, when the Argonauts happened to be particularly weak in seniors, and Taylor saved the day for them at the Canadian Henley by winning the junior, intermediate and senior fours with a crew of unknowns. At that time, Tom Longboat was the athletic idol of the hour, and as the newly discovered stroke was tall, angular and the color of bronze, he was the object of some burn, the sporting public promptly called him "Longboat" Taylor. Although the name was also appropriate for the winner of eight-oared races, it did not stick to him, possibly because he never liked it particularly. Indeed on one occasion, a local sporting editor received a card with the phrase cut from a paper and pasted on it with the request written beneath: "Mr. Jeff Taylor, if you please." Anyway the once popular nickname has been forgotten, though the namesake continues to win races.—Saturday Night.

A Landmark in New Brunswick.

The First European Settlement in New Brunswick was established in 1611 by Captain Marvelle and others from St. John's, France.

This is the inscription on a cairn which the New Brunswick Historical Society erected a few days ago, to commemorate the beginning of civilization in the province by the sea. Caten's Island is several miles up the St. John's River. The society made the trip quickly by a brand new steamboat. Three hundred years ago, weary St. John's voyagers crept up the river after weeks on the Atlantic and faced a tribe of redskins, whose feelings they hurt somewhat by appropriating their island as a landing place.

The present owner of Caten's Island is Mr. James Lowell. He has given a deed for the site of the settlement that the public may take a look at it whenever they so wish.

The action of the New Brunswick Historical Society in honoring this landmark in the story of New Brunswick is but a commencement of a campaign in the province to evoke public interest in the past. Both in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick a historical movement at present seems to have a hold on the minds of the people. Very recently in this department mention was made of work done by the Nova Scotia Society in Halifax.

The Shattering of a Romance.

The tragic death of the well-known novelist, Myrtle Reed, author of "Lavender and Old Lace," and numerous other romances, recalls a rather interesting story of which a Toronto man was the hero.

Years ago, James Sidney McCullough was a high school pupil in Toronto. He was editor of the school paper which—exchanged with some other college publications, including some across the line. One day the journalist James was immensely struck by the editorial comment in a high school paper called "The Voice," from Chicago. He communicated with the writer. The Voice editor turned out to be a girl.

In Chicago the other day Myrtle Reed succeeded. She left a fortune of $250,000. Some Canadian editors are trying to prove that she was far happier as Myrtle Reed, the high school writer in The Voice, than as one of the mostly widely read novelists in America.

An Odd Character.

James Cook, janitor of the Medical Faculty, McGill University, Montreal, who was known to hundreds of doctors and students throughout the Dominion, died recently. He was 55. The Montreal Star, in a glowing tribute to the departed janitor, relates a peculiar yarn.

"He had one hobby—a gruesome hobby over which he chuckled, and over which deans and professors shuddered. He collected the professional door plates of deceased doctors, and he looked on every doctor who became connected with the institution as a coming contributor to his collection.

One of the first things he would do when a new professor was appointed was to ask him to bestow his door-plate on him when he died—for he had lived so long and through so many evolutions of McGill that he had come to look on himself as being the only indispensable part of the institution."
