

When "Work" Becomes "Labor"

There's Something Wrong, Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Will Right It.

When it seems as if you simply could not bear up any longer it is high time to look for the cause of the trouble—and the remedy.

Neglect of the daily movement of the bowels, so necessary to health, soon poisons the whole system from the impurities retained in the body.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills not only regulate the bowels, but they stimulate kidneys and skin as well to throw off waste matter and purify the blood.

THE CASHIER'S THANKSGIVING.

"I'm going to have a regular old fashioned Thanksgiving dinner," said the cashier, who was lonesome, never before having been away from the farm on this festive day.

"Devel'd turkey and canned pumpkin," laughed the stenographer. She was a seasoned bachelor girl and thought it her duty to squelch all sickly sentiments exhibited by the cashier.

She knew that Bess was pining in her secret heart for the lover with whom she had quarreled and on whose account the pretty cashier now was an exile.

"Real turkey and real home-made pumpkin pie and all the trimmings," said the cashier triumphantly. "I couldn't bear to buy a fourth plate at the Thanksgiving dinner table—George Weymouth in Chicago Tribune."

Some Thanksgiving History. The manner in which Thanksgiving day was first instituted as a national festival has special interest.

The special purpose, as recommended to congress, was to give thanks for the adoption of the constitution. In 1795 the suppression of the whisky insurrection was recognized by a presidential call for a national day of thanksgiving.

The practice of officially recommending the observance of a thanksgiving festival was gradually adopted by the states until it now has place among the great holidays of the nation.

The First Thanksgiving. The first Thanksgiving in New England is described in a letter written to a "loving and old friend" and dated at "Plymouth, this 11th of November, 1621."

Such an assortment as was there. Turkey, pumpkin, apples, sweet potatoes, cranberries, oysters, a square of fruit cake, a loaf of bread, a bunch of celery, sugar, flour—everything that could be needed, and all in the smallest quantities.

"You've bankrupted us," cried the stenographer in despair. "Oh, my dear, my dear," said the cashier calmly. "You see, I've saved my money. We expected to have a good dinner tomorrow, anyway. Now we will have enough left over to last us till Sunday."

"And Arthur is coming, bless his heart," cooed the stenographer. "What a day you will have. If only—She pushed and looked at Bess.

"There are no 'ifs' only's in the case. Let's get busy," said the cashier bravely, but there was a tear in her eye. "I will put the turkey and oysters in Mrs. Brown's icebox, and you may cut up the pumpkin. We will stew it tonight and be ready for the pies in the morning."

"Look here, Bess. There's a name on this pumpkin. I am hot on the trail of a romance," said the stenographer.

Bess came and looked over the stenographer's shoulder. There in rude letters on the pumpkin's yellow skin was carved the name of all names and this unique message: "Sam Bunnelsfeld, Clydesmore, Ind., would like to correspond with the handsome young girl who gets this pumpkin."

"The cashier burst into tears. "It is your Sam, isn't it?" asked the stenographer.

"Yes," sobbed the cashier. "And the wretch is trying to get up a flirtation with some city girl. He thinks somebody will see the name and write to him. Oh, how I hate him!"

To prove that she hated him she threw herself on the bed and wept for half an hour. In the meantime the stenographer was busy with the pumpkin. But when she cut it up she was careful to keep in one piece the section on which Sam's name was carved.

"When morning came Bess was too busy to be lonesome. The landlady gave the two girls the run of her kitchen and furnished them with all the spices they needed for their cooking. She was almost as much interested in the great dinner as the girls were.

Before noon the doctor's boy came with flowers from Arthur, and when the table was set and decorated it was a triumph of cosy beauty.

"You know her?" asked Arthur at last.

"We are old friends," said the tall stranger blushing. "Then come with me," said Arthur cordially. "I am going up there now."

When Arthur knocked at the door the stenographer went to open it. Her eyes were shining. Bess turned her back and pretended to be busy at the window.

The stenographer's words of welcome died on her tongue when she saw that Arthur was not alone.

"This gentleman wants to see Miss Grant," said Arthur. The little cashier turned slowly toward the door. "Sam!" she cried.

"Bess!" He came rapidly toward her and took her hands. "Bess, it was a foolish quarrel. I could not bear to think of your being alone here on Thanksgiving day."

The stenographer hurried around to lay a fourth plate at the Thanksgiving dinner table—George Weymouth in Chicago Tribune.

WOULD SHOCK WORLD

WHAT WAR BETWEEN FRANCE AND GERMANY MEANS.

Conflict Between the Two European Nations Would Be the Most Stupendous Armageddon in Our Written History—Such a Clash Would Inevitably Involve Great Britain in Some Measure.

There has been an ominous hush in Europe for forty years. During that time everything has pointed to peace.

Since the middle of last June the diplomats of France and Germany have been discussing the Moroccan question. What they have had to say, back and forth, no one knows but themselves.

Germany has a wonderful army. It probably is the best-trained body of the world ever had. Military critics have praised its organization in unstated terms.

A great deal has been printed, too, about the growth of Germany and its industrial development. France has been considered to be retrograding to be no longer among the first-class powers, and to be no match for the Germans in war.

Numerically the navy and the army of Germany are stronger than that of France. But both by sea and by land Germany is hemmed in geographically.

In the two-score years since the fall of Sedan France has not been idle. She has raised a triple line of fortifications between the frontier and Paris. These are, in all probability, the vastest and the nearest impenetrable of any system of fortification ever has known.

France and Germany together, if they go to war, will put 3,000,000 trained soldiers in the field and the conflict will be the most stupendous Armageddon the earth has known.

France will act on the defensive and for the first time in military history fortifications will play a dominant role in the game of war. It has taken these last forty years to build these three lines of huge entrenched camps with intermediate forts that parallel the whole length of the frontier.
